Counter-Claims at the International Court of Justice (2017)

Sean D. Murphy
George Washington University Law School, smurphy@law.gwu.edu

Follow this and additional works at: https://scholarship.law.gwu.edu/faculty_publications

Part of the Law Commons

Recommended Citation

This Article is brought to you for free and open access by the Faculty Scholarship at Scholarly Commons. It has been accepted for inclusion in GW Law Faculty Publications & Other Works by an authorized administrator of Scholarly Commons. For more information, please contact spagel@law.gwu.edu.
Counter-Claims at the International Court of Justice

Sean D. Murphy
Manatt/Ahn Professor of International Law
George Washington University School of Law

Article 80 of the Rules of the International Court of Justice

(1) The Court may entertain a counter-claim only if it comes within the jurisdiction of the Court and is directly connected with the subject-matter of the claim of the other party.

(2) A counter-claim shall be made in the Counter-Memorial and shall appear as part of the submissions contained therein. The right of the other party to present its views in writing on the counter-claim, in an additional pleading, shall be preserved, irrespective of any decision of the Court, in accordance with Article 45, paragraph 2, of these Rules, concerning the filing of further written pleadings.

(3) Where an objection is raised concerning the application of paragraph 1 or whenever the Court deems necessary, the Court shall take its decision thereon after hearing the parties.

(1) La Cour ne peut connaître d’une demande reconventionnelle que si celle-ci relève de sa compétence et est en connexion directe avec l’objet de la demande de la partie adverse.
(2) La demande reconventionnelle est présentée dans le contre-mémoire et figure parmi les conclusions contenues dans celui-ci. Le droit qu’a l’autre partie d’exprimer ses vues par écrit sur la demande reconventionnelle dans une pièce de procédure additionnelle est préservé, indépendamment de toute décision prise par la Cour, conformément au paragraphe 2 de l’article 45 du présent Règlement, quant au dépôt de nouvelles pièces de procédure.

(3) En cas d’objection relative à l’application du paragraphe 1 ou à tout moment lorsque la Cour le considère nécessaire, la Cour prend sa décision à cet égard après avoir entendu les parties.

A. Introduction paras. 1–4

B. Historical Development of the Counter-Claims Rule paras. 5–11
   I. Permanent Court of International Justice paras. 5–7
   II. International Court of Justice paras. 8–11

C. Issues of Interpretation paras. 12–83
   I. Two Requirements for Entertaining the Counter-Claim paras. 13–18
   II. Jurisdiction Over the Counter-Claim ‘As Such’ paras. 19–32
   III. Direct Connection with the Subject-Matter of the Claim paras. 33–56
   IV. Filing the Counter-Claim with the Counter-Memorial paras. 57–59
   V. Counter-Claim as an Independent Claim and Not a Defence paras. 60–61
   VI. Other Party’s Right to an Additional Pleading paras. 62–64
   VII. Procedure for Deciding Admissibility paras. 65–71
   VIII. Withdrawal of the Counter-Claim paras. 72–73
   IX. Further Objections to the Counter-Claim at the Merits Phase paras. 74–79
   X. Disposition of the Counter-Claim on the Merits paras. 80–83

D. Evaluation paras. 84–86
A. Introduction

1 A ‘counter-claim’ is ‘an autonomous legal act’ by the respondent in a contentious case before the Court, ‘the object of which is to submit a new claim to the Court’, one that is ‘linked to the principal claim, in so far as, formulated as a “counter” claim, it reacts to’ the principal claim.\(^1\) A counter-claim is not a defence on the merits to the principal claim;\(^2\) while it is a reaction to that claim, it is pursuing objectives other than simply dismissal of the principal claim.\(^3\) Hence, the reason for allowing a counter-claim to be included as part of an existing case is not because it assists in disposition of the principal claim but, rather, to assist in the disposition of two autonomous claims.\(^4\) The counter-claim is allowed to become a part of an existing case ‘in order to ensure better administration of justice, given the specific nature of the claims in question’ and ‘to achieve a procedural economy whilst enabling the Court to have an overview of the respective claims of the parties and to decide them more consistently’.\(^5\)

2 The ICJ Statute does not directly address the issue of the respondent filing a counter-claim against the applicant. Article 80 of the Rules, however, provides that the Court may entertain such a counter-claim in certain circumstances, as a part of the incidental proceedings of an existing case. The Court’s establishment of this rule is generally predicated on its authority under Art. 48 of the Statute to ‘make orders for the conduct of the case’.

---

4 Anzilotti, JDI (1930), pp. 874 et seq.

3 Counter-claims featured somewhat in the early life of the Court (in 1950–1952), but then disappeared for several decades, only re-emerging in several cases after 1997. Renewed interest in the use of counter-claims may be due to a desire by respondents to present to the Court a more balanced perspective of the conduct of the two States before it, since inclusion of the counter-claim may force both the Court and the other party to confront certain facts and legal arguments that otherwise would not feature in the case. From the Court’s perspective, allowing a counter-claim in the proper circumstances promotes the value of judicial economy, since addressing the claim and counter-claim in a single proceeding may be more efficient than doing so in separate cases. At the same time, there are requirements that must be met before a counter-claim may be entertained, requirements designed to prevent a respondent from using an unrelated counter-claim simply as a tactic for slowing down the disposition of principal claim and for detracting from a central focus on that claim.

4 In the normal course of any respondent defending against a claim, the respondent will assert a factual and legal position that ‘counters’ the position of the applicant. Advancement of that position, however, is not regarded as a ‘counter-claim’ within the meaning of Art. 80 of the Rules, and does not implicate the requirements and procedures discussed later. Indeed, the relatively limited practice of counter-claims may be because the Court, when rejecting any claim on the merits, concomitantly accepts the position of the respondent in much the same way as it would if a closely-related counter-claim had been filed. A coun-

---

7 Genet, Rev. de droit intern. et de lég. comp. (1938), pp. 145 et seq.

8 See e.g. Case Concerning the Arbitral Award of 31 July 1989, Judgment, ICJ Reports (1991), pp. 53, 75–6, para. 69 (3) (rejecting the applicant’s position that the award was not binding and instead Counter-claim only arises before the Court as part of a formal step taken by the respondent. That step changes the possibilities of the case, for it invites the Court to issue a judgment directed against the applicant, opening the door to a remedy against the very State that initiated the case.9

B. Historical Development of the Counter-Claims Rule

I. Permanent Court of International Justice

Like the ICJ Statute, the Statute of the PCIJ did not address the issue of counter-claims. Article 40 of the 1922 Rules of Court of the PCIJ, however, envisaged the possibility of counter-claims being filed as a part of a respondent’s responsive pleading, insofar as they ‘come within the jurisdiction of the Court’,10 but provided no particular guidance on how such counter-claims should proceed. This initial and very cursory reference to counter-claims was not changed in the Rules of Court adopted in 1926 and 1931.11 The issue was much further developed in Art. 63 of the 1936 Rules of the Court, which provided that counter-claims were limited to cases initiated by a unilateral application, must be filed with the Counter-Memorial, and must be ‘directly connected’ to the subject-matter of the application.12

Counter-claims arose before the PCIJ in three cases.13 In Factory at Chorzów, Poland filed a document that it titled a ‘counter-claim’. The Court regarded Poland’s submis-

9 Anzilotti, JDI (1930), pp. 874 et seq.
11 Guyomar, Commentaire, p. 519.
13 For an analysis of the practice of the PCIJ, see Antonopoulos (2011), pp. 37–47.
sion as juridically connected to Germany’s claim (indeed, the concept of ‘direct connection’ identified here influenced the later crafting of Art. 63 of the 1936 Rules), but the Court viewed Poland’s submission as simply an effort to offset the amount of compensation that might be paid to Germany. The Court assumed jurisdiction over Poland’s submission by virtue of its jurisdiction over Germany’s claim, but rejected the submission in the course of deciding in favour of Germany. It should be noted that, since the Rules of Court rather confusingly contemplated a respondent filing a ‘counter-case’, which might include ‘counter-claims’, it may not have been clear to Poland what was meant by a true counter-claim.

7 In Diversion of Water from the Meuse, Belgium filed a counter-claim, over which the Court found (without objection from the Netherlands) that it had jurisdiction and further found was directly connected to the Netherlands’ claim. Nevertheless, on the merits, the Court rejected both the claim and counter-claim as unfounded. In Panevezys-Saldutiskis Railway, Lithuania advanced a counter-claim contingent on the Court finding Estonia’s claim admissible, which the Court did not. As such, the Court did not pass upon the counter-claim.

II. International Court of Justice

8 The 1946 Rules of Court addressed counter-claims in Art. 63, which generally (but not exactly) followed Art. 63 of the PCIJ Rules of Court. Three counter-claims were filed under the 1946 formulation of the rule, all in the period 1950–1952. Norway “reserved”

---

16 Diversion of Water from the Meuse, Judgment, PCIJ, Series A/B, No. 70, pp. 4, 28–32.

17 Panevezys-Saldutiskis Railway, Judgment, PCIJ, Series A/B, No. 76, pp. 4, 7–9, 22; see Guyomar, Commentaire, p. 522.
a counter-claim in 1950 against the United Kingdom in Fisheries case; Peru filed a counter-claim in 1950 against Colombia in Asylum; and the United States filed a counter-claim in 1951 against France in Rights of US Nationals in Morocco.18

9 The 1972 Rules of Court renumbered the rule on counter-claims as Art. 68, but no counter-claims were filed during the period that those rules were in force. The 1978 Rules of Court revised the text of the article on counter-claims and renumbered it as Art. 80. Four cases filed during the time that the 1978 Rules of Court were in force resulted in the filing of a counter-claim: Yugoslavia filed counter-claims in 1997 against Bosnia and Herzegovina in the (Bosnian) Genocide case; the United States filed a counter-claim in 1997 against Iran in Oil Platforms; Nigeria filed counter-claims in 1999 against Cameroon in Land and Maritime Boundary between Cameroon and Nigeria; and Uganda filed counter-claims in 2001 against the Democratic Republic of the Congo in Armed Activities on the Territory of the Congo.

10 In 2000, the Court amended Art. 80 of the Rules to its present formulation,19 which applies to all cases submitted to the Court on or after 1 February 2001. As of 2017, four cases have included the filing of a counter-claim under the 2000 amendment: Italy filed a counter-claim in 2009 against Germany in Jurisdictional Immunities of the State; Serbia filed a counter-claim in 2010 against Croatia in the (Croatian) Genocide case; Nicaragua filed four counter-claims in 2012 against Costa Rica in Certain Activities Carried Out by Nicaragua in the Border Area; and Colombia in 2016, Colombia filed four counter-claims against Nicaragua in Alleged Violations of Sovereign Rights and Maritime Spaces in the Caribbean Sea.

11 The different versions of the rule address similar issues, but variations in the text mean that decisions reached by the Court in prior cases should be considered in the light of the formulation of the rule on counter-claims in existence at that time. Further, some changes in the text provide a basis for how best to interpret the rule that is currently in force. For example, in the formulations of the rule prior to 1978, the text indicated that a counter-claim could only be made in cases that began with the filing of an application, which made clear that a counter-claim was not envisaged for a case initiated by a joint application of two States. The more recent formulations of the rule contain no such requirement. Though it is likely that the filing of a joint application by two States would already encompass whatever claims the two States wish to bring against each other, it is possible that developments in the case subsequent to the filing of the joint application result in one of the States wishing to introduce a new ‘counter-claim’ in response to the other State’s presentation of its claim. The change in formulation of the rule would appear to allow such a counter-claim, so long as the other requirements of Art. 80 of the Rules are met.

---

18 Guyomar, Commentaire, pp. 522 et seq.

C. Issues of Interpretation

  As indicated earlier, the Court’s rule on counter-claims has changed somewhat over time. Likewise, the application and interpretation of the rule by the Court in several cases has helped to clarify and develop the meaning of the rule. This section addresses the key areas where the Court’s jurisprudence has shaped the regime on counter-claims.

I. Two Requirements for Entertaining the Counter-Claim

  Article 80, para. 1 of the Rules allows the Court to entertain a ‘counter-claim’. The Rule does not define what is meant by ‘counter-claim’ or whether that term, by itself, imposes certain limitations upon what may be filed. In his dissenting opinion with respect to Yugoslavia’s counter-claim in the (Bosnian) Genocide case, Judge Weeramantry insisted that the term required that the counter-claim ‘counter’ the principal claim, rather than simply be a parallel claim arising from circumstances linked in space and time to the principal claim. For Judge Weeramantry, there ‘must be some point of intersection between the two claims, which makes one exert an influence upon the judicial consequence of the other’. The counter-claim might go further than just impinging upon or weakening the principal claim by seeking reparation from the applicant, but it still must ‘counter’ the principal claim; a ‘claim that is autonomous and has no bearing on the determination of the initial claim does not thus qualify as a counter-claim’. In the context of that case, Yugoslavia’s counter-claim that Bosnia and Herzegovina committed acts of genocide could not possibly diminish, off-set or weaken any acts of genocide committed by Yugoslavia and thus, for Judge Weeramantry, Yugoslavia’s counter-claim was incapable of ‘countering’ the principal claim.

Judge Weeramantry’s view, however, was not adopted by the Court. In that and subsequent cases, the Court has not viewed the term ‘counter-claim’ as itself embodying particular constraints on the type of claim that may be filed with the Court. Instead, the Court has focused on the other language of Art. 80, para. 1 of the Rules, which provides that the Court may entertain a counter-claim ‘only if’ two requirements are met: when the counter-claim ‘comes within the jurisdiction of the Court’ and when the counter-claim is ‘directly connected with the subject matter of the claim of the other party’. The Court has characterized these two requirements both as requirements on the ‘admissibility of a counter-claim as such’, explaining that admissibility ‘in this context must be understood broadly to encompass both the jurisdictional requirement and the direct-connection requirement’.

---

21 Ibid., p. 291.

23 Alleged Violations of Sovereign Rights and Maritime Spaces in the Caribbean Sea, Counter-Claims, Order of 15 November 2017, ICJ Reports (2017), para. 19; see also Oil Platforms, Counter-Claim, 15 The reason for the first requirement, relating to jurisdiction, is to preclude the respondent from using the counter-claim ‘as a means of referring to an international court claims which exceed the limits of its jurisdiction as recognized by the parties’. The reason for the second requirement, relating to ‘direct connection’, is to preclude the respondent from using the counter-claim as a means ‘to impose on the Applicant any claim it chooses, at the risk of infringing the Applicant’s rights and of compromising the proper administration of justice’.

16 The use of ‘may entertain’ rather than ‘shall entertain’ makes clear that acceptance of the counter-claim as a part of the case, even if the counter-claim meets these two requirements, is wholly within the discretion of the Court; it still remains open for the Court to decline to address the counter-claim within the proceedings. To date, the Court has not exercised such discretion; in each instance where it has found both requirements to have been met, the Court has allowed the counter-claim to proceed as part of the case.

17 The use of the word ‘only’ makes clear that, if either of the two requirements is not satisfied, the Court should not entertain the counter-claim. Thus, the requirements are

25 Ibid.

“cumulative” in nature; both must be satisfied for the counter-claim to be found admissible.\textsuperscript{27} Even if the applicant does not object to the counter-claim, it appears that the Court must still consider whether the counter-claim meets these two requirements. Thus, in the (Croatian) \textit{Genocide case}, although Croatia indicated that it did not intend to raise objections to the admissibility of Serbia’s counter-claims, that alone did not dispose of the matter. Rather, the Court simply stated that it ‘does not consider that it is required to rule definitively \textit{at this stage} on the question of whether the said claims fulfil the conditions set forth in Article 80, paragraph 1, of the Rules of Court’.\textsuperscript{28} In its practice to date, whenever the Court has found that one or other of the requirements has not been met, it has declined to allow the counter-claim to become a part of the case before it.

18 In the formulations of the rule prior to 2000, the two key requirements for the filing of a counter-claim—that it falls within the jurisdiction of the Court and that it is directly connected with the subject-matter of the principal claim—were reversed. Nevertheless, in the cases before the Court that arose under the prior formulation of the rule, the Court first determined whether it had jurisdiction over the counter-claim before proceeding to the issue of the connection with the principal claim. The order of the requirements in the current formulation arguably places somewhat greater emphasis on need for the counter-claim to fall within the jurisdiction of the Court; in the event that it does not, the question of whether it is directly connected to the principal claim becomes irrelevant. Nevertheless, the Court is free to analyse the two requirements in whatever sequence it wishes; for example, in \textit{Alleged Violations of Sovereign Rights and Maritime Spaces in the Caribbean Sea}, the Court addressed \textsuperscript{27} \textit{Alleged Violations of Sovereign Rights and Maritime Spaces in the Caribbean Sea}, Counter-Claims, Order of 15 November 2017, ICJ Reports (2017), para. 20.

\textsuperscript{28} \textit{Croatian Genocide case}, Order of 4 February 2010, ICJ Reports (2010), pp. 3, 6 (emphasis added).
the requirement of direct connection prior to addressing the requirement of jurisdiction.²⁹

II. Jurisdiction Over the Counter-Claim ‘As Such’

19 As indicated earlier, para. 1 of Art. 80 of the Rules provides that the counter-claim may be entertained only if it ‘comes within the jurisdiction of the Court’.

20 To the extent that the applicant fails to object to the Court’s jurisdiction over the counter-claim at any point in the proceeding, the Court typically finds that jurisdiction exists with little if any discussion.³⁰ Thus, in Rights of US Nationals in Morocco, France invoked the compulsory jurisdiction of the Court to obtain a finding that a treaty concluded between the United States and the Emperor of Morocco in September 1936 provided only for exemptions from local jurisdiction for US nationals in Morocco in certain limited, specified cases. In its Counter-Memorial, the United States maintained by means of a counter-claim that it was entitled to more extensive benefits. In its reply, France contested the merits of the US position, but did not object to the jurisdiction of the Court over the US counter-claim. The Court proceeded to deal with the counter-claim without any discussion of jurisdiction (or, for that matter, the connectivity of the counter-claim to the claim).³¹ Similarly, when Nigeria filed its counter-claim against Cameroon, the latter indicated no objection of any kind, and the Court found without discussion that jurisdiction existed.³²

²⁹ See Alleged Violations of Sovereign Rights and Maritime Spaces in the Caribbean Sea, Counter-Claims, Order of 15 November 2017, ICJ Reports (2017), para. 20 (the Court “is not bound by the sequence set out in” Article 80).

21 The applicant might object to the admissibility of the counter-claim for reasons other than jurisdiction. Thus, in the (Bosnian) Genocide case, Bosnia and Herzegovina invoked the compromissory clause of the Genocide Convention against Yugoslavia to advance its claim that Yugoslavia had committed acts of genocide in violation of the Convention. Yugoslavia invoked the same basis of jurisdiction to advance its counter-claim that Bosnia and Herzegovina had committed acts of genocide. Although Bosnia and Herzegovina objected to the connection of the counter-claim to the principal claim, it did not object to the Court’s jurisdiction over the counter-claim. In the course of finding the counter-claim admissible, the Court simply noted the lack of any jurisdictional objection.\textsuperscript{33} Likewise, in the context of a claim by the DRC based upon the Court’s compulsory jurisdiction, the DRC objected to the admissibility of Uganda’s counter-claim on the issue of connectivity, but not with respect to jurisdiction.\textsuperscript{34} The Court noted that the DRC ‘does not deny that Uganda’s claims fulfil the “jurisdictional” condition’\textsuperscript{35} and proceeded to address solely the issue of connectivity in disposing of the DRC’s objection.

22 The applicant might object to the Court’s jurisdiction, but only with respect to some aspects of the counter-claim. In Asylum, Peru advanced a counter-claim to the effect that Colombia acted unlawfully under the 1928 Convention on Asylum by granting asylum to Víctor Raúl Haya de la Torre. The Court’s jurisdiction over the counter-claim as originally formulated was not challenged by Colombia and the Court proceeded based on an assumption that jurisdiction existed. At the oral hearing in October 1950, however, Peru amended the counter-claim to include that ‘the maintenance of the asylum constitutes at the present time a violation of’ the 1928 Convention’. Colombia did object to the Court’s jurisdiction over this addition, but given the Court’s ultimate disposition of the principal claim in favour of Colombia, the Court found it superfluous to address the jurisdictional objection.

\textsuperscript{34} Armed Activities case (DRC v. Uganda), Counter-Claims, Order of 29 November 2001, ICJ Reports (2001), pp. 660, 666, para. 8.

\textsuperscript{35} Ibid., p. 677, para. 30.

The applicant might also object to the Court’s jurisdiction over the entire counter-claim. In the Jurisdictional Immunities case, Italy sought to ground the Court’s jurisdiction over the counter-claim upon the 1957 European Convention for the Peaceful Settlement of Disputes. Article 27 (a) of the Convention stated that its provisions did not apply to facts or situations arising prior to the Convention’s entry into force. Because Italy’s counter-claim appeared to concern facts and situations that pre-dated the Convention (harm to Italians committed by Nazi Germany between 1943 and 1945, and the waiver of claims contained in the 1947 Peace Treaty), Germany maintained that Italy’s counter-claim fell outside the scope of the Court’s jurisdiction. Italy sought to argue that its counter-claim actually concerned inadequate and incomplete efforts at reparation beginning with two 1961 Settlement Agreements and continuing to recent years. The Court, however, agreed with Germany that such later developments were not ‘new’ situations post-dating the entry into force of the Convention; rather, they simply concerned the existence and scope of a German obligation to make reparation for violations that had occurred at a much earlier time. Therefore the Court had no jurisdiction over the counter-claim and it was inadmissible.

An interesting temporal question arises if the basis for the Court’s jurisdiction over the principal claim disappears between the time that the case is filed and the time that the counter-claim is filed. In Alleged Violations of Sovereign Rights and Maritime Spaces in the Caribbean Sea, Nicaragua filed its application in 2013, invoking as the basis of the Court’s jurisdiction the 1948 American Treaty on Pacific Settlement (Pact of Bogotá). Based on a denunciation by Colombia, the Pact subsequently terminated as between Nicaragua and Colombia. In March 2016, the Court found that it had jurisdiction over the case, since that Pact was still in force as of the date that the case was filed. In November 2016, Colombia filed counter-claims against Nicaragua. In rejecting Nicaragua’s argument that the Court had no jurisdiction over the counter-claims because they were filed after the termination of the Pact as between Nicaragua and Colombia, the Court stated that once “the Court has established jurisdiction to entertain a case, it has jurisdiction to deal with all its phases; the subsequent lapse of the title cannot deprive the Court of its jurisdiction”. In this instance, “the lapse of the jurisdictional title invoked by an applicant in support of its claims, subsequent to the filing of the application, does not deprive the Court of its jurisdiction to entertain counter-claims filed on the same jurisdictional basis”. While generally agreeing with this proposition, Judge Donoghue wrote separately to argue that the lapse of jurisdictional title necessitated a further inquiry (which the Court did not undertake), which is whether the counter-claims “fit within the subject-matter” of the dispute presented in Nicaragua’s application (a narrower standard than whether the counter-claim was directly connected with the subject-matter of the principal claim).

---

36 Asylum, Judgment, ICJ Reports (1950), pp. 266, 280.

Article 80, para. 1 of the Rules does not require, by its terms, that the counter-claim should have exactly the same jurisdictional basis as that upon which the principal claim arises.\footnote{See Thirlway, \textit{Leiden JIL} (1999), pp. 203 et seq.; Antonopoulos (2011), pp. 74–80.} As such, the text arguably leaves open the possibility that, \textit{e.g.}, in a case brought based on the Court’s jurisdiction under the compromissory clause of a treaty to interpret one provision of that treaty, the counter-claim might be based upon the Court’s jurisdiction to interpret a different provision of the same treaty. Further, in theory, the counter-claim might be based upon the Court’s jurisdiction under a compromissory clause of an entirely different treaty, or upon an entirely different type of jurisdiction, such as invocation of the Court’s compulsory jurisdiction.\footnote{Genet, \textit{Rev. de droit intern. et de lég. comp.} (1938), pp. 161 et seq.; Anzilotti, \textit{JDI} (1930), pp. 868 et seq.}

40 Ibid.

26 In the \textit{Oil Platforms case}, however, there is some suggestion that the jurisdictional basis available for a counter-claim might be limited to the existing jurisdiction over the principal claim. In that case, the Court’s jurisdiction over Iran’s claim was restricted by the Court, at the jurisdiction phase of the case, solely to the interpretation of Art. X, para. 1, of the 1955 US-Iran Treaty of Amity, Economic Relations and Consular Rights.\footnote{\textit{Oil Platforms case}, supra, fn. 23, Preliminary Objection, ICJ Reports (1996), pp. 803, 821, para. 55.} That paragraph provides that ‘Between the territories of the two High Contracting Parties there shall be freedom of commerce and navigation’, whereas the other paragraphs of Art. X deal with various rights and privileges of vessels of the two parties. When the United States then filed its Counter-Memorial, it included a counter-claim concerning alleged Iranian attacks on shipping in the Persian Gulf, as well as the laying of mines and other military actions, in violation of Art. X \textit{as a whole}, not just para. 1 of that article. Iran objected to the Court’s jurisdiction over the counter-claim, asserting in part that the United States ‘seeks to widen the dispute to provisions of the Treaty of Amity … which were never in question in the proceedings’.

In response, the United States argued that the Court, under the 1978 formulation of the rule, should not reach the issue of jurisdiction at the preliminary stage; instead the only matter properly at issue under Art. 80 of the Rules was whether there was doubt that the counter-claim was directly connected to the principal claim.

In its Order on the counter-claim, the Court did not limit itself to the issue of connectivity; it squarely addressed the issue of jurisdiction ‘as such’ over the counter-claim. The Court first noted that, in its prior judgment on jurisdiction over Iran’s principal claim, it found that Art. X, para. 1, protected not just the immediate sale of goods, but also ancillary activities integrally related to such commerce. Then, the Court found that the activities at issue in the counter-claim ‘are capable of falling within the scope of Article X, paragraph 1’ and therefore ‘the Court has jurisdiction to entertain the United States counter-claim in so far as the facts alleged may have prejudiced the freedoms guaranteed by Article X, paragraph 1’. In the dispositif, the Court then found that the counter-claim was ‘admissible as such and forms part of the current proceedings’.

In so doing, the Court may have limited the counter-claim to alleged violations arising under only Art. X, para. 1, not Art. X as a whole. If so, however, the Court did not explain exactly why the counter-claim was to be so limited, a step criticized by Judge Higgins in her separate opinion. According to Higgins:

In the first place, findings that reject the contentions of a party should be based on reasons. The disturbing tendency to offer conclusions but not reasons is not to be welcomed.

---

46 Ibid., p. 204, para. 35.
47 Ibid., p. 204, para. 36.
48 Ibid., p. 206, para. 46 (A).
In the second place, the inarticulate assumption that the jurisdictional basis established for a claim necessarily is the only jurisdictional basis for, and sets the limits to, a counter-claim, is open to challenge.

...

There is nothing in the Rules or practice of the Court to suggest that the very identical jurisdictional nexus must be established by a counter-claimant. The travaux préparatoires to the various formulations of what is now Article 80 of the Rules contain no suggestion whatever that this was thought of as a requirement. The rule on counter-claims has gone through successive changes. But neither in the discussions of 1922, nor of 1934, 1935, 1936, nor again of 1946, 1968, 1970, 1972, does this thought anywhere appear.49

...

Nor does the wording of Article 80, paragraph 1 of the Rules suggest this. It requires that a counter-claim ‘comes within the jurisdiction of the Court’, not that it ‘was within the jurisdiction established by the Court in respect of the claims of the applicant’.50

29 If Judge Higgins’ interpretation of what the Court did is correct, then a counter-claim that is based upon a legal provision different from that upon which the principal claim is based may encounter difficulty, at least in circumstances where the Court has already passed upon and limited the scope of the principal claim. Such an approach would no doubt be influenced by the second admissibility requirement (discussed later, in 33–56), which is that the counter-claim must be directly connected with the subject-matter of the principal claim. In many instances, the ‘connectivity’ issue may also require a close relationship between the jurisdiction of the principal claim and the jurisdiction of the counter-claim.

However, it is not actually clear that the Court limited the US counter-claim to Art. X, para. 1 of the 1955 Treaty. During the subsequent merits phase, Iran remained concerned that portions of Art. X other than para. 1 were still part of the counter-claim, and hence objected that any portion of the counter-claim based upon those paragraphs should be regarded as inadmissible. In addressing Iran’s objection the Court, in its 2003 judgment on the merits, did not assert that it had decided that the US counter-claim was limited to Art. X, para. 1. Instead, the Court noted that the United States itself, in the submissions filed with its rejoinder, ‘substantially narrowed the basis of its counter-claim’ by only referring to Art. X, para. 1, thereby depriving Iran’s objection ‘of any object’. In other words, the Court’s ultimate judgment strongly suggests that the 1998 Order of the Court did not restrict the counter-claim to Art. X, para. 1; that ‘narrowing’ only happened in March 2001 by the conduct of the United States itself when filing its rejoinder.

In any event, in situations where the Court first finds that the jurisdictional requirement has not been met, it refrains from moving on to the next requirement concerning direct connection of the counter-claim with the subject-matter of the claim. If the Court finds that the jurisdictional requirement has been met, it proceeds to the next requirement.

Importantly, a finding in favour of jurisdiction for purposes of Art. 80 of the Rules does not definitively resolve the Court’s jurisdiction over the counter-claim. The Court uses language in its Order to the effect that it has found admissibility under Art. 80 of the 52 Ibid., pp. 211–2, paras. 110–1.

---

Rules ‘as such’,\textsuperscript{54} by which it appears to mean that, on the facts as pled by the respondent, the counter-claim appears to fall within the jurisdiction of the Court. Further, the Court includes language that the Order ‘in no way prejudges any question with which the Court would have to deal during the remainder of the proceedings’.\textsuperscript{55} Although the Court has not characterized this approach to jurisdiction under Art. 80 of the Rules as a form of \textit{prima facie} jurisdiction, akin to that used in the context of proceedings on interim measures of protection, it would appear to operate in much the same way. As discussed later, in MN 75–78, the applicant remains able, as the ‘Merits’ phase of the case unfolds, to revisit the issue of jurisdiction in the context of all the facts and law developed during that phase, and to demonstrate to the Court that jurisdiction does not actually exist over the counter-claim.

\section*{III. Direct Connection with the Subject-Matter of the Claim}

Paragraph 1 of Art. 80 of the Rules also provides that the counter-claim may be entertained only if it ‘is directly connected with the subject-matter of the claim of the other party’\textsuperscript{56}. Art. 80 of the Rules provides no guidance as to how such a connection is to be assessed and application of this requirement appears to be more of an art than a rigid science. Indeed, signalling its considerable latitude when applying the requirement, the Court has stressed that ‘it is for the Court, in its sole discretion, to assess whether the counter-claim is sufficiently connected to the principal claim, taking into account the particular aspects of each case’.\textsuperscript{57}

\textsuperscript{54} See \textit{e.g. Armed Activities case} (DRC/Uganda), \textit{supra}, fn. 23, ICJ Reports (2001), pp. 660, 681, para. 45.

\textsuperscript{55} See \textit{e.g. ibid.}, p. 681, para. 46.

\textsuperscript{56} For a historical explanation of the ‘direct-connection’ requirement, see Antonopoulos (2011), pp. 119 \textit{et seq}.

\textsuperscript{57} \textit{Bosnian Genocide} case, Counter-Claims, Order of 17 December 1997, ICJ Reports (1997), pp. 243,
In the event that no objection is made to the connection of the counter-claim to the claim, the Court nevertheless itself examines such connectivity. Thus, in the Land and Maritime Boundary case, Cameroon did not object to Nigeria’s counter-claim, but the Court still discussed and determined that a connection existed. In that instance, the Court was confronted with Cameroon’s claim that Nigeria had unlawfully occupied Cameroon’s territory in the Bakassi Peninsula and with Nigeria’s counter-claims that Cameroon had engaged in unlawful incursions into Nigerian territory along the same land border. The Court determined that Nigeria’s counter-claims were ‘directly connected’ since they:

rest on facts of the same nature as the corresponding claims of Cameroon, and … all of those facts are alleged to have occurred along the frontier between the two States; … the claims in question of each of the Parties pursue the same legal aim, namely the establishment of legal responsibility and the determination of the reparation due on this account …

If the respondent does object due to the lack of a ‘direct connection’ between the principal claim and the counter-claim, the Court may readily dismiss that objection, as occurred in the Asylum case.\(^6^0\) In that case, Colombia’s principal claim concerned Peru’s alleged obligation to allow for safe conduct of Víctor Raúl Haya de la Torre. Peru’s counter-claim alleged that the asylum was not lawful under the Convention. Colombia challenged the admissibility of the counter-claim, arguing that it was not directly connected with the subject-matter of the Application. The Court rejected the objection, stating:

---

It emerges clearly from the arguments of the Parties that the second submission of the Government of Colombia, which concerns the demand for a safe conduct, rests largely on the alleged regularity of the asylum, which is precisely what is disputed by the counter-claim. The connexion is so direct that certain conditions which are required to exist before a safe-conduct can be demanded depend precisely on facts which are raised by the counter-claim. The direct connexion being thus clearly established, the sole objection to the admissibility of the counter-claim in its original form is therefore removed.\(^6^1\)

Yet in other instances, the counter-claim may not be essentially an inescapable component or ‘flip side’ of the principal claim, in which case the Court must weigh the two Parties’ differing views as to what it is about the two claims that must ‘connect’ and how ‘direct’ the connection must be. The rule does not indicate whether the assessment of the ‘connection’ concerns facts, concerns law, or concerns some combination of the two. Issues of admissibility before the Court typically depend on facts\(^6^2\) not law, but in its jurisprudence on counter-claims, the Court has said that the existence of the ‘direct connection’ must be considered ‘both in fact and in law’, and with regard to whether the parties are pursuing the same ‘legal aims’.\(^6^3\)

---

\(^6^0\) Guyomar, Commentaire, pp. 521 et seq.

\(^6^1\) Asylum case, supra, fn. 34, ICJ Reports (1950), pp. 266, 280.

\(^6^3\) Armed Activities case (DRC/Uganda), supra, fn. 23, ICJ Reports (2001), pp. 660, 679, para. 38; see 37 As is the case for understanding the meaning of ‘counter-claim’ (as discussed previously in MN 13), the Court does not approach the ‘connection’ requirement as requiring that the counter-claim seek to diminish, off-set, or neutralize the principal claim. Some counter-claims may have that effect, but the lack of that element does not defeat the requisite connection to the principal claim. For example, in the Armed Activities case (DRC/Uganda), the Court rejected the DRC’s position that the arguments supporting the counter-claim ‘must both support the counter-claim and be pertinent for the purposes of rebutting the principal claim’.

38 Further, the factual ‘connection’ or ‘complex’ for comparing the principal claim and the counter-claim, as seen in the decisions of the Court, does not require that the underlying facts of the two claims be identical. Indeed, in most situations, the facts supporting the claim and the counter-claim are not the same, but they are related. For the Court, that relationship appears to turn upon two key factors: the period of time during which the conduct at issue occurred and its geographical location. The period of time of the conduct at issue in the two claims need not be exactly the same; conduct relating to one claim might span a longer time period than the other. The geographical location also need not be exactly the same; the conduct at issue in the counter-claim might occur in a place not at issue in the principal claim. Nevertheless, a relationship in time and space does need to exist. The ‘legal connection’ seems to turn on two further factors: the legal and non-legal instruments at issue, and the overall objective of addressing a particular legal relationship between the parties. In most instances, it seems important whether the conventional or customary law at issue with respect to both claims is largely or exclusively the same; invocation of an entirely new instrument in the counter-claim as having been violated may be a basis for denying a sufficient connection of that part of the counter-claim.

---

39 The standard is best understood as applied by the Court in specific cases. In the (Bosnian) Genocide case, Bosnia and Herzegovina filed a claim that concerned allegations of wide-ranging conduct in the early 1990s in Bosnia and Herzegovina by Yugoslavia, including ‘ethnic cleansing’, summary execution, bombardment of the civilian population, destruction of property, and other acts that constituted or related to genocide, all directed at Bosnia and Herzegovina’s non-Serb population. In its Counter-Memorial, Yugoslavia advanced a counter-claim that Bosnia and Herzegovina was responsible in the same time period in Bosnia and Herzegovina for comparable acts of genocide, this time directed at Bosnian Serbs. Both the claim and counter-claim, therefore, involved conduct in the same place (Bosnia and Herzegovina) and in the same time frame (the early 1990s) that allegedly violated the same treaty (the Genocide Convention).

67 See, e.g., Alleged Violations of Sovereign Rights and Maritime Spaces in the Caribbean Sea, Counter-Claims, Order of 15 November 2017, ICJ Reports (2017), para. 36 (finding that two of Colombia’s counterclaims “essentially relate to the same geographical area that is the focus of Nicaragua’s principal claims”).

40 Bosnia and Herzegovina nevertheless objected to the admissibility of Yugoslavia’s counter-claim as not ‘directly connected’ to the principal claim, maintaining that the facts at issue in the counter-claim were ‘totally different’ from those of the principal claim, and that the examination of one set of facts ‘would be of no help in the judicial analysis of the other set and could not affect its outcome in any way whatsoever’. Moreover, as a legal matter, Bosnia and Herzegovina argued that erga omnes rights at issue in the Genocide Convention are inherently non-reciprocal in nature; there is nothing about the adherence or lack of adherence by one Party to the Convention that has any bearing on the obligations of a different Party. Bosnia and Herzegovina insisted that connectivity required some element of ‘countering’ the principal claim by reducing or neutralizing its effects.

41 For its part, Yugoslavia maintained that there was no requirement that the exact same facts be at issue. Further, Yugoslavia noted that both claims were based upon the same treaty and the same general rules of state responsibility, and that the facts of both concerned ‘the same tragic conflict, i.e., civil war in Bosnia and Herzegovina, which happened in a single territorial and temporal setting, based on the same historical background and within the framework of the same political development’. Moreover, Yugoslavia maintained that analysing the facts of the counter-claim was ‘of crucial importance to answer the question of attribution to the Respondents of acts alleged by the Applicant’, since in some instances the identical facts were at issue with respect to allegations arising under both claims.\textsuperscript{74} Finally, since a violation of the Convention involved assessing the intent of the underlying conduct, Yugoslavia argued that understanding the facts associated with the counter-claim was essential for understanding Yugoslavia’s intent in taking certain actions at certain times.\textsuperscript{75}

42 The Court rejected Bosnia and Herzegovina’s position and found the ‘direct connection’ requirement to have been met. With respect to the facts, the Court stated:

in the present case, it emerges from the Parties’ submissions that their respective claims rest on facts of the same nature; … they form part of the same factual complex since all those facts are alleged to have occurred on the territory of Bosnia and Herzegovina and during the same time period; and … Yugoslavia states, moreover, that it intends to rely on certain identical facts in order to refute the allegations of Bosnia and Herzegovina and to obtain judgment against that State.\textsuperscript{76}

43 Hence, the concept of a ‘factual complex’ appears fairly broad in nature, capable of encompassing alleged conduct by one State against another State’s nationals in that other State (here, the principal claim) and alleged conduct by that other State in its own territory against its own nationals (here the counter-claim).

44 With respect to the law, the Court in the (Bosnian) Genocide case accepted that the\textit{ erga omnes} obligations at issue meant that one party’s breach could not possibly excuse that of the other party, but even so:

\begin{itemize}
\item \textsuperscript{74} \textit{Ibid.}, pp. 254–5, paras. 19–20.
\item \textsuperscript{75} \textit{Ibid.}, p. 255, para. 21.
\item \textsuperscript{76} \textit{Ibid.}, p. 258, para. 34.
\end{itemize}
the absence of reciprocity in the scheme of the Convention is not determinative as regards the assessment of whether there is a legal connection between the principal claim and the counter-claim, in so far the two Parties pursue, with their respective claims, the same legal aim, namely the establishment of legal responsibility for violations of the Genocide Convention.\footnote{Ibid., p. 258, para. 35. Ad hoc Judge Kreća took issue with calling the applicant’s claim the ‘principal’ claim, given that the two claims were autonomous and non-hierarchical in nature; he would have preferred the terms ‘initial’ or ‘original’ claim. \textit{Bosnian Genocide case}, Decl. Kreća, ICJ Reports (1997), pp. 262, 262–3, para. 1. The Court, however, has taken to referring to the ‘principal’ claim and the ‘counter-claim’.
}

45 The Court also noted that in its order on interim measures of protection, it had called upon both States, not just Yugoslavia, to adhere to their obligations under the Genocide Convention,\footnote{\textit{Bosnian Genocide case}, Counter-Claims, Order of 17 December 1997, ICJ Reports (1997), pp. 243, 258–9, para. 36.} thus suggesting that there was a connection between the conduct of both parties with respect to the underlying dispute. When Serbia years later presented a similar set of facts in support of its counter-claim against Croatia (albeit this time with respect to the Krajina region of Croatia), Croatia did not contest the connection between the counter-claim and the claim.\footnote{\textit{(Croatian) Genocide case, supra}, fn. 27, ICJ Reports (2010), pp. 3 \textit{et seq.}}

46 The issue of connectivity was also addressed in detail in the \textit{Oil Platforms case}, decided just four months after the \textit{(Bosnian) Genocide case}. Iran’s principal claim concerned US attacks on three Iranian oil platforms in the Persian Gulf in 1987–1988, in violation of Art. X, para. 1, of the 1955 US-Iran Treaty of Amity, Economic Relations and Consular Rights, which provides that ‘Between the territories of the two High Contracting Parties there shall be freedom of commerce and navigation’.

47 The US counter-claim was not focused on the oil platforms but, instead, on Iranian small-boat attacks and mine-laying that harmed US and other vessels in the Persian Gulf in the same period (the United States alleged that some gunboats were launched from Iran’s oil platforms). The United States identified seven specific incidents in 1987–1988 involving such attacks or mine-laying, but reserved the ability to add further incidents as the proceedings progressed. Iran contended that there was no direct connection between the counter-claim and the principal claim. As a factual link, according to Iran, the United States did not attack the three oil platforms because of the seven alleged Iranian attacks. As a legal link, six of the seven incidents did not involve vessels engaged in commerce or navigation ‘between’ the two countries (e.g. some of the attacks were against US military vessels), while the seventh incident did not involve a US-flagged vessel for which the United States was entitled to advance a claim. The United States contested those views, but further argued that Iran’s attacks generally had an effect on shipping protected by Art. X by creating threatening conditions for all merchant vessels operating in the Gulf, and that the US attacks on the platforms in response to Iran’s threatening actions was at the heart of its defence against the principal claim.

48 The Court found that the necessary connection existed, stating:

it emerges from the Parties’ submissions that their claims rest on facts of the same nature; … they form part of the same factual complex since the facts relied on—whether involving the destruction of oil platforms or of ships—are alleged to have occurred in the Gulf

\(^{80}\) Oil Platforms case, supra, fn. 23, Preliminary Objection, ICJ Reports (1996), pp. 803 et seq.

\(^{81}\) Ibid., ICJ Reports (1998), pp. 190, 192–3, para. 4.

\(^{82}\) Ibid., pp. 197–8, paras. 16–8.

\(^{83}\) Ibid., pp. 201–2, paras. 24–5.
during the same period; … the United States indicates, moreover, that it intends to rely on the same facts and circumstances in order both to refute the allegations of Iran and to obtain judgment against that State; and … , with their respective claims, the two Parties pursue the same legal aim, namely the establishment of legal responsibility for violations of the 1955 Treaty.

49 In the Armed Activities case (DRC/Uganda), the DRC’s claim concerned a series of alleged acts by Uganda that constituted armed aggression (including incursions into and occupation of DRC territory, and support of irregular forces in the DRC), violation of the laws of war, and the unlawful downing of a civilian aircraft. Uganda’s counter-claim alleged that the DRC had engaged in unlawful acts against Uganda, which the Court approached as falling into three categories: (1) alleged DRC acts of aggression against Uganda; (2) alleged DRC attacks upon Ugandan diplomatic premises and personnel in the DRC’s capital, Kinshasa, as well as upon Ugandan nationals located there; and (3) alleged DRC violations of the Lusaka Agreement of July 1999, which had attempted to end the armed conflict that had broken out among eight African nations in 1998.

50 With respect to the first category, the Court found that a direct connection existed. The Court found that the parties’ ‘respective claims relate to facts of the same nature, namely the use of force and support allegedly provided to armed groups’, and that temporally both claims ‘concern a conflict in existence between the two neighboring States’ since 1994 (even though Uganda’s counter-claim ranged over a longer period than did the principal claim). With regard to the legal connection, the Court noted that ‘each Party seeks to establish the other’s responsibility based on the violation of the principle of the non-use of force’ in Art. 2, para. 4 of the UN Charter and in customary international law, as well as the principle of non-intervention; hence the parties were ‘pursuing the same legal aims’.

---

51 With respect to the second category, the Court reached a similar conclusion, even though the conduct at issue in the counter-claim (attacks on Ugandan diplomatic premises and personnel, and on non-diplomatic persons in Kinshasa) was not in the same geographical region as the conduct at issue in the principal claim. Here the Court focused more on the temporal dimension of those attacks having allegedly occurred at the same time (August 1998) as the alleged Ugandan invasion of the DRC, which therefore placed them in the same factual complex (the unstated assumption being that the alleged attacks were a response to that alleged invasion). Further, the Court noted that both parties were invoking rules on state responsibility and on the protection of persons and property, which demonstrated that they were ‘pursuing the same legal aims’. Ad hoc Judge Verhoeven voted against the Court’s decision, saying that the alleged attack on the diplomatic persons and property in Kinshasa:

> does not appear to me to throw any useful light for the Court on the armed aggression and unlawful occupation of part of its territory for which the Democratic Republic of the Congo claims to have suffered . . . the mere fact that this attack is part of a multifaceted history of conflict is not sufficient to justify the Respondent being authorized to seise the Court of this claim by way of counter-claim.

52 The Court did not find the requisite connection with respect to the third category of Uganda’s counter-claims, since the alleged violation of the Lusaka Agreement con-

---

87 Ibid.

88 Ibid., p. 679, para. 40.

89 Ibid.

cerned matters of dispute resolution, which was not within the subject-matter of the principal claim. According to the Court, this part of Uganda’s counter-claims referred:

- to the Congolese national dialogue, to the deployment of the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (MONUC) and to the disarmament and demobilization of armed groups ... [and] these questions, which relate to methods for solving the conflict in the region agreed at [a] multilateral level in a ceasefire accord ... , concern facts of a different nature from those relied on in the Congo’s claims, which relate to acts for which Uganda was allegedly responsible during that conflict ...

Hence, the Court found that this part of Uganda’s counter-claim was not part of the ‘factual complex’ of the principal claim. Further, this part of the counter-claim concerned an alleged violation of legal rules (in the Lusaka Agreement) that were not presented in the DRC’s claim, such that the parties were not pursuing the same legal aims with respect to this issue.

53 In Border Area/Construction of a Road, the Court held that two of Nicaragua’s counter-claims had no direct connection with Costa Rica’s claims in either fact or law, and were therefore inadmissible. Costa Rica’s claims concerned an alleged incursion into, occupation of, and use by Nicaragua’s army of Costa Rican territory, specifically concerning actions in Isla Portillos and dredging operations on the San Juan River. Nicaragua’s second counter-claim asked the Court to declare that it ‘has become the sole sovereign over the area formerly occupied by the Bay of San Juan del Norte.’ The Court found that this counter-claim was not directly connected to Costa Rica’s claim as a matter of fact (the geographical and temporal points of reference were different) or as a matter of law (Costa Rica’s claim concerned breaches of sovereignty, of international environmental law, and of an 1858 treaty, while the counter-claim concerned acquisition of sovereignty as a result of circumstances that had evolved since 1858).\(^{94}\) Nicaragua’s third counter-claim requested the Court to find that Nicaragua had a right to free navigation on a portion of the San Juan River. Although the geographical and temporal links here were closer (the claims related to a common river system and the right to navigate was allegedly ‘revived’ by Costa Rica’s resistance to Nicaragua’s dredging), the Court still found that the facts underpinning the claims and counter-claim were ‘of a different nature’ and that the legal issues were not directly connected.\(^{95}\)

---

92 Ibid.
93 Border Area/Construction of a Road, Counter-Claims, Order of 18 April 2013, ICJ Reports (2013), pp. 200, 212-3, paras. 33-4.

54 In Alleged Violations of Sovereign Rights and Maritime Spaces in the Caribbean Sea, the Court found no direct connection between two of Colombia’s counter-claims due to both facts and law. With respect to facts, Colombia’s counter-claims were focused on an alleged failure to protect and preserve the marine environment, particularly through actions of private Nicaraguan vessels, whereas Nicaragua’s principal claims were based on actions of Colombia’s Navy in allegedly interfering with and violations of Nicaragua’s sovereign rights and jurisdiction in its exclusive economic zone.\(^{96}\) Similarly, with respect to law, Colombia’s counter-claims were based on customary international law (and international instruments) relating to protection of the environment, whereas Nicaragua’s principal claims concerned customary international law of the sea relating to the rights, jurisdiction and duties of the coastal State.\(^{97}\) By contrast, a Colombian counter-claim focused on the conduct, rights and obligations of Nicaragua’s Navy in Nicaragua’s exclusive economic zone was found directly connected to the Nicaragua’s principal claims. Likewise, the Court found a direct connection between a Nicaraguan claim and a Colombian counter-claim that alleged violation of sovereign rights through the adoption by the other Party of a domestic legal instrument fixing the limits of their respective maritime zones in the same geographical area.

If the Court finds there is no direct connection between the counter-claim (or portions thereof) and the principal claim, there is no indication in Art. 80 of the Rules as to what procedure the Court should then follow. In theory, the Court’s discretion might include ordering that the counter-claim will henceforth be treated as a separate case on the Court’s docket, though doing so would be an unusually robust exercise of the Court’s discretion. In any event, the practice of the Court to date, once it finds no direct connection, has simply been to decline to entertain the counter-claim as a part of the case before the Court.

Doing so leaves the respondent free to initiate an entirely new case before the Court against the other State based on the subject-matter of the erstwhile counter-claim. Indeed, Art. 63 of the 1936 Rules of Court expressly stated as much, saying: ‘Any claim which is not directly connected with the subject of the original application must be put forward by means of a separate application and may form the subject of distinct proceedings or be joined by the Court to the original proceedings.’ To date, however, no State that has advanced a counter-claim unsuccessfully has exercised this option. If such a new case were filed, there would appear to be two possibilities for how the Court could proceed, as signalled in the 1936 formulation. The Court could address the two cases in separate proceedings, or could formally or informally join the two cases in a single proceeding, pursuant to Art. 47 of the Rules of Court. If the latter were to occur, and if the Court determined that it had jurisdiction over the new case, then the two claims would proceed in a fashion very similar to what would 98 Ibid., paras. 44-46.

---

99 Ibid., para. 52-54.
have otherwise occurred if the counter-claim had been admissible in the first proceeding.\(^{100}\)

IV. Filing the Counter-Claim with the Counter-Memorial

57 Paragraph 2 of Art. 80 of the Rules provides that the ‘counter-claim shall be made in the Counter-Memorial and shall appear as part of the submissions of that party’.\(^{101}\) Since Art. 80 of the Rules is located in the portion of the Rules of Court that deals with incidental proceedings, it is generally accepted that the reference here is to the Counter-Memorial filed on the merits of the principal claim, not a Counter-Memorial addressed to jurisdiction or admissibility. Thus, the expectation is that, after an application is filed, any objections by the respondent to jurisdiction or admissibility of the principal claim would first be addressed by the Court (a process which is especially likely since those objections must be raised no later than three months after the filing of the Memorial, regardless of when the Counter-Memorial is scheduled thereafter to be filed). Only if the Court decides against those objections is the respondent expected to file its Counter-Memorial on the merits, at which point it must file at the same time any counter-claim.\(^{102}\) The rule does not permit filing of the counter-claim at either an earlier or later stage in the proceedings nor does it apparently permit the submission of a counter-claim orally. Moreover, the rule does not permit the filing of a ‘counter-counter-claim’ by the applicant, a step not attempted in any case filed to date before the Court.

58 In some instances, in the course of filing preliminary objections on jurisdiction or admissibility, a respondent has included a reservation to the effect that, if such objections are not sustained, the respondent may decide to file a counter-claim at the merits stage. Though not required by the Rules of Court, such a reservation is an understandable precaution and, in any event, signals to the Court the intention of the respondent in the event that the \(^{100}\) Genet, Rev. de droit intern. et de lég. comp. (1938), pp. 164 et seq.

\(^{101}\) Antonopoulos (2011), pp. 135 et seq.

\(^{102}\) Anzilotti, JDI (1930), pp. 874 et seq.
case moves forward.

59 Once a counter-claim has been filed in conjunction with the Counter-Memorial and has been found admissible, Art. 80 of the Rules does not address whether it should be notified to all States entitled to appear before the Court (as is done when an application initiating a case is filed with the Court, pursuant to Art. 40, para. 3 of the Statute of the Court). In the initial cases involving counter-claims before the International Court (Asylum and Rights of US Nationals in Morocco), no such notification appears to have occurred. Nevertheless, since the decision on admissibility of the counter-claim in the (Bosnian) Genocide case, a practice has developed whereby the Court instructs the Registrar of the Court to transmit a copy of the Court’s Order on admissibility to those States, or its Order scheduling further pleadings in the event that admissibility is not challenged. Doing so is an appropriate step, inter alia, to ensure that any State that believes it has interests at stake in the Court’s adjudication of the counter-claim may seek to intervene in the proceeding, pursuant to Arts. 62 or 63 of the Court’s Statute. Even so, the Court does not transmit along with its Order the portion of the Counter-Memorial advancing the counter-claim, so third States are left to assess the nature of the counter-claim from the Court’s Order alone.

105 (Croatian) Genocide case, supra, fn. 27, ICJ Reports (2010), pp. 3 et seq.

107 For a discussion of the position of third states concerning the filing of a counter-claim, see Antonopoulos (2011), pp. 103–9.
V. Counter-Claim as an Independent Claim and Not a Defence

Once the counter-claim is permitted, the language of Art. 80 of the Rules strongly indicates that the counter-claim operates as an independent claim, neither as a defence to the principal claim nor as a claim dependent on the principal claim.\textsuperscript{108} Both paras. 1 and 2 of Art. 80 of the Rules refer to the applicant as simply the ‘other party’ to the counter-claim; it is no longer exclusively the ‘Applicant’ in the proceeding. In the event that the principal claim fails on the merits, or is withdrawn, there is no direct effect upon the counter-claim, which will stand or fall on its own merits.

In the (Bosnian) Genocide case, the Court confirmed that, although the counter-claim is a reaction to the principal claim, ‘a counter-claim is independent of the principal claim in so far as it constitutes a separate “claim”, that is to say an autonomous legal act the object of which is to submit a new claim to the Court’.\textsuperscript{109} Further, the counter-claim widens ‘the original subject-matter of the dispute by pursuing objectives other than the mere dismissal of the claim of the Applicant in the main proceedings’, and thus is ‘distinguishable from a defence on the merits’.\textsuperscript{110} In the normal course of events, this means that a counter-claim (unlike a defence) will identify a violation of international law for which the other party is responsible and will seek reparation from the Court for that violation.\textsuperscript{111} If it does not serve this function, then it will not be regarded as a ‘counter-claim.’ Hence, when Yugoslavia filed certain submissions as part of its counter-claim that related exclusively to dismissal of Bosnia and Herzegovina’s claims, those submissions were not viewed by the Court as ‘counter-claims’ within the meaning of Art. 80 of the Rules. Likewise, when Nicaragua filed a counter-claim seeking to address a concern about Costa Rica’s compliance with an order on provisional measures of protection, the Court viewed such a request as something that could be addressed in the normal course of the exercise of its jurisdiction, and therefore did not need to be entertained as a ‘counter-claim.’

\textsuperscript{108} Anzilotti, \textit{JDI} (1930), pp. 874 \textit{et seq.}; see Antonopoulos (2011), pp. 60 \textit{et seq.}

\textsuperscript{110} Ibid.; see also United States Diplomatic and Consular Staff in Tehran (United States of America/Iran), Request for the Indication of Provisional Measures, ICJ Reports (1979), pp. 7, 15, para. 24 (distinguishing a defence from a counter-claim).

\textsuperscript{111} Armed Activities case (DRC/Uganda), \textit{supra}, fn. 23, ICJ Reports (2001), pp. 660, 676–7, para. 29.

VI. Other Party’s Right to an Additional Pleading

Since the counter-claim is an independent claim, para. 2 of Art. 80 of the Rules establishes procedural equality as between the two claims, by making clear the right of the ‘other party’ (i.e. the applicant) to ‘present its views in writing on the counter-claim, in an additional pleading’. Thus, whatever schedule may be set by the Court for addressing the merits of the principal claim in the case, which under Art. 45 of the Rules of Court always allows the respondent to file the final written pleading on the principal claim, the ‘other party’ to the counter-claim will then be allowed to file a further written pleading that exclusively addresses its final views on the counter-claim. In this way, equal treatment is preserved as 113 Border Area/Construction of a Road, Counter-Claims, Order of 18 April 2013, ICJ Reports (2013), pp. 200, 215, paras. 39-40 (addressing Nicaragua’s fourth counter-claim). Nicaragua’s first counter-claim, which was originally filed in the Border Area case, was subsumed within claims filed by Nicaragua in the Construction of a Road case once the two cases were joined. Ibid., pp. 200, 208-9, paras. 22-4. between the parties with regard to their respective claims.\textsuperscript{114}

---

63 Thus, when the Court decided favourably on the admission of Yugoslavia’s counter-claim in the (Bosnian) Genocide case, it stated in its Order that ‘it is necessary moreover, in order to ensure strict equality between the parties, to reserve the right of Bosnia and Herzegovina to present its views in writing a second time on the Yugoslav counter-claims, in an additional pleading which may be the subject of a subsequent Order’.\textsuperscript{115} The same language was included in its Orders for Oil Platforms,\textsuperscript{116} Land, Island and Maritime Frontier Dispute (Cameroon v. Nigeria), Armed Activities (DRC v. Uganda),\textsuperscript{117} and (Croatian) Genocide.\textsuperscript{118} Thereafter, the applicants took advantage of this possibility to file a supplemental pleading. For example, in Oil Platforms, Iran filed its ‘Reply and Defence to Counter-Claim’ in March 1999 addressing both the US position on the claim and counter-claim; the United States filed its rejoinder in March 2001 responding to those arguments; and then Iran filed a final ‘Further Response to the United States of America Counter-claim’ in September 2001, which related solely to the counter-claim arguments made by the United States in its rejoinder.

64 Although Art. 80, para. 2 of the Rules addresses only an additional pleading ‘in writing’, the same approach carries on through to the oral hearing. After the respondent’s final oral statement (whether arising in a first or second round of the oral hearing), the ‘other party’ is entitled to make an oral statement limited exclusively to its final views on the coun-

\begin{footnotesize}
\textsuperscript{114} Anzilotti, \textit{JDI} (1930), pp. 874 \textit{et seq.}; Salerno, \textit{RGDIP} (1999), pp. 374 \textit{et seq.}

\textsuperscript{117} Armed Activities case (DRC v. Uganda), \textit{supra}, fn. 23, ICJ Reports (2001), pp. 660, 681, para. 50.

\textsuperscript{118} (Croatian) Genocide case, \textit{supra}, fn. 27, ICJ Reports (2010), pp. 3 \textit{et seq.}
\end{footnotesize}
ter-claim. Thus, in Oil Platforms, at the end of the first round of the oral hearing, Iran was provided the opportunity to make an oral presentation limited solely to the US counter-claim, and was again allowed that opportunity at the very end of the second round.\(^{119}\)

VII. Procedure for Deciding the Admissibility of the Counter-Claim

65 Article 80, para. 3 of the Rules provides minimal guidance with respect to the procedure for deciding on the admissibility of the counter-claim, but practice has helped to indicate the procedures that the Court will likely follow.\(^{120}\) The respondent would normally explain, as a part of filing the counter-claim with the Counter-Memorial, why the counter-claim meets the two admissibility requirements. The President or Vice-President of the Court would then ascertain, in a meeting of the parties, whether the applicant has objections to the admissibility of the counter-claim. As noted earlier, if there is no objection, the Court must still satisfy itself that the two requirements of para. 1 are met, a decision that apparently may be reached without receiving any further views from the parties, unless the Court ‘deems necessary’ receiving such views per Art. 80, para. 3 of the Rules.

66 In cases before the Permanent Court, such as Factory at Chorzów, and in the initial cases before the International Court, including the Asylum and Rights of US Nationals in Morocco cases, the Court did not dispose of issues concerning the admissibility of the counter-claim in a preliminary proceeding. Instead, such issues were folded into the pleadings on the merits relating to the principal claim. Conversely, the Court has often disposed of the admissibility of the counter-claim at a preliminary stage, pursuant to an order addressing exclusively the admissibility of the counter-claim, whether or not the respondent has objected to the admissibility of the counter-claim. Thus, in the Land and Maritime Boundary case, Cameroon did not object to the admissibility of Nigeria’s counter-claims, but the Court still issued an order indicating why the twin requirements of Art. 80 of the Rules had been met. Article 80, para. 3 of the Rules, however, does not require that the matter be disposed of at a preliminary stage.

67 If there is an objection by the respondent to the admissibility of the counter-claim, Art. 80, para. 3 of the Rules provides that ‘the court shall take its decision thereon after hearing the parties’. Again, the rule does not expressly require that the matter be disposed of at a preliminary stage; the issue of admissibility could be addressed as part of the reply and rejoinder pleadings filed in relation to the merits of claim and counter-claim. Nevertheless, in recent years the Court has instead initiated an incidental proceeding, ordering the applicant to comment in writing upon the admissibility of the counter-claim under Art. 80 of the Rules and the respondent to react to those views in writing. Doing so has the advantage of determining at an early stage whether the counter-claim should be included as part of the case. The disadvantages are that: (1) initiation of an incidental proceeding slows down the process of dealing with the applicant’s claim; and (2) at such an early stage, it may be difficult to determine whether the counter-claim is directly connected to the principal claim, since all the relevant facts and law on that claim have not been fully developed through pleadings on the merits. In his separate opinion in Oil Platforms, Judge Oda lamented this approach, which he viewed as an unfortunate departure from the Court’s past practice.121

68 May the applicant solely object to the jurisdiction of the counter-claim during the incidental proceeding, leaving for a later phase a possible objection as to whether the counter-claim is ‘directly connected’ to the principal claim? In the Jurisdictional Immunities case, Germany immediately objected to the Court’s jurisdiction over Italy’s counter-claim, but did ‘not deem it useful at this stage of the proceedings to engage in a legal battle about the links between’ the principal claim and the counter-claim.\textsuperscript{122} Further, Germany asserted that there were other reasons as well that the counter-claim might be inadmissible and that ‘Germany reserves the right to raise such additional preliminary objections, if need be, at a later stage’\textsuperscript{123} Italy responded by acknowledging ‘Germany’s right to leave open for now the question of the direct connection’, but expressed concern that doing so was not consistent with a prompt and efficient disposition of issues that Germany wished to raise.\textsuperscript{124} Since the Court found that it had no jurisdiction over the counter-claim, the Court did not squarely address one way or the other whether it is permissible to challenge, in a preliminary phase, only the issue of jurisdiction.\textsuperscript{125}

\textsuperscript{69} Article 80, para. 3 of the Rules is not clear as to whether ‘hearing the parties’ requires that, whenever an applicant objects, the Court should provide an opportunity for an \textit{oral} hearing.\textsuperscript{126} Prior to the 1978 version of the rule, there was no language at all addressing the issue of ‘hearing’ the parties, referring instead to the Court simply engaging in ‘due examination’ of the matter. The 1978 version of the Rule stated that ‘in the event of doubt as to the connection between’ the claim and counter-claim, ‘the Court shall, after hearing the parties, decide’ the matter. That formulation of the rule applied in the (Bosnian) Genocide case. After Yugoslavia’s counter-claim was filed, both parties apparently contemplated, during a meeting with the President of the Court, that they would submit written views to the Court on \textsuperscript{122} \textit{Jurisdictional Immunities of the State} case, Preliminary Objections of the Federal Republic of Germany Regarding Italy’s Counter-Claim of 10 March 2010, p. 3, para. 3.

\textsuperscript{123} \textit{Ibid.}, p. 3, para. 2.

\textsuperscript{124} \textit{Ibid.}, Observations of Italy on the Preliminary Objections of the Federal Republic of Germany Regarding Italy’s Counter-Claim of 18 May 2010, p. 4, paras. 4–6.

\textsuperscript{125} \textit{Ibid.}, Counter-Claim, Order of 6 July 2010, p. 6, para. 16, p. 11, para. 32.

\textsuperscript{126} See Thirlway, \textit{Leiden JIL} (1999), pp. 224 \textit{et seq.}

the counter-claims admissibility and then ‘be heard orally on the question’. Judge Koroma thought that the Court should have conducted an oral hearing, as did ad hoc Judges Lauterpacht and Kreća, with the latter asserting that “hearing” as a term of procedure before the Court denotes, in the sense of Article 43, paragraph 5, and Article 51 of the Statute, oral proceedings before the Court. Their views, however, were obviously not persuasive to the Court.

In Oil Platforms, the 1978 formulation was also at issue. Iran requested an oral hearing on its objection to the admissibility of the counter-claim both in its meeting with the Court and in its written observations. By contrast, the United States argued that no hearing was required under Art. 80 of the Rules, or in the context of the circumstances of Iran’s particular objection, given that there was no ‘doubt’ that the principal claim was connected to the counter-claim. Again, the Court decided that it was not necessary to hear further from the parties by means of an oral hearing. Judge Oda, in his separate opinion, questioned the propriety of finding a counter-claim admissible without having an oral hearing but, here too, his position was not accepted.\footnote{Ibid., Sep. Op. Oda, ICJ Reports (1998), pp. 208, 215, para. 9.}

---

71 In 2000, the rule was changed to its present formulation, such that where an objection is raised or whenever the Court deems necessary, ‘the Court shall take its decision thereon after hearing the parties’. This formulation also does not expressly require an oral hearing. In the \textit{Jurisdictional Immunities case}, the Court received written pleadings from the parties with respect to Germany’s objection to the counter-claim and chose to decide the matter based solely on those pleadings.\footnote{Jurisdictional Immunities of the State case, Counter-Claim, Order of 6 July 2010, p. 4 of the Order, para. 7.} Judge Gaja, sitting as an \textit{ad hoc} judge appointed by Italy, stated in his declaration that the wording introduced in 2000 ‘appears to imply that an oral hearing should be held’ and that doing so ‘seems particularly justified when an objection relates to jurisdiction, given the impact of a decision on jurisdiction’, including the inability to bring the counter-claim as a separate case.\footnote{Ibid., Decl. Gaja, p. 1.} Similarly, Judge Cançado Trindade, the lone dissenter to the Court’s order, asserted that the Court ‘should’ have held an oral hearing, though he did not indicate whether doing so was required under Art. 80, para. 3 of the Rules.\footnote{Ibid., Diss. Op. Cançado Trindade, p. 10 of the Opinion, para. 30, p. 44, para. 154.} Such arguments, however, were not viewed as persuasive by the other judges. As such, it appears that the Court does not regard Art. 80, para. 3 of the Rules, even under its current formulation, as requiring an oral hearing. Indeed, the Court has not held a hearing in any of the cases to date in which the admissibility of a counter-claim has been disputed.

\textbf{VIII. Withdrawal of the Counter-Claim}

72 If no objection is made or if any objections are rejected by the Court, then the Court’s review of the counter-claim will proceed to the merits phase, in conjunction with its consideration of the merits of the principal claim. Prior to addressing the counter-claim on the merits, however, the respondent is free to withdraw the counter-claim with the consent of the other party, in the same manner that any claim can be discontinued.\footnote{\textsuperscript{140} Anzilotti, \textit{JDI} (1930), p. 876; Antonopoulos (2011), pp. 154 \textit{et seq.}}

73 For example, in the \textit{(Bosnian) Genocide case}, the 1997 counter-claims filed by Yugoslavia were deemed admissible by the Court. In 2001, however, Yugoslavia notified the Court that it wished to withdraw the counter-claims. The Court notified Bosnia and Herzegovina, which indicated that it had no objection. The Court then allowed the counter-claims to be withdrawn.\footnote{\textsuperscript{141} Bosnian Genocide case, \textit{supra}, fn. 1, Order of 10 September 2001, ICJ Reports (2001), pp. 572–3.} In \textit{Fisheries case}, Norway apparently initially ‘reserved’ a counter-claim against the United Kingdom for costs associated with capturing UK vessels that were allegedly wrongfully fishing in Norwegian waters.\footnote{\textsuperscript{142} Fisheries case (United Kingdom/Norway), Counter-Memorial submitted by the Government of the Kingdom of Norway, vol. I, ICJ Pleadings, pp. 214, 576.} The Court decided the principal claim largely in favour of Norway, but without directly addressing the ‘counter-claim’; after the Court transmitted its 1951 judgment to Norway, Norway informed the Court that it no longer intended to assert its counter-claim.\footnote{\textsuperscript{143} \textit{Ibid.}, vol. IV, ICJ Pleadings, p. 692.}

\textbf{IX. Further Objections to the Counter-Claim at the Merits Phase}

74 As indicated earlier, often the counter-claim has been found admissible by the Court (the \textit{Jurisdictional Immunities case} being the primary exception). Unless the counter-claim is withdrawn, then the Court proceeds to the merits phase, where the parties are expected to plead to the merits of the counter-claim in conjunction with their pleadings on the merits of the principal claim.

75 Even at this ‘Merits’ stage, however, the applicant is capable of challenging aspects of jurisdiction and admissibility of the counter-claim other than what was already decided in the context of the incidental proceeding under Art. 80 of the Rules. Thus, at the merits phase of Oil Platforms, Iran contended that it was entitled to raise any objections to the jurisdiction of the Court over, and the admissibility of, the US counter-claim that were not decided as a part of the Court’s 1998 order on admissibility under Art. 80 of the Rules. To that end, Iran challenged the US counter-claim on the grounds that: (1) it was not presented after the negotiations required under the 1955 Treaty compromissory clause; (2) the United States cannot espouse claims on behalf of other States or of non-US entities, whose vessels or property were allegedly harmed; (3) the counter-claim extended beyond Art. X, para. 1 of the 1955 Treaty, the only provision over which the Court found it has jurisdiction; (4) the counter-claim concerned ‘freedom of navigation’ issues, but the Court’s jurisdiction over the principal claim only concerned ‘freedom of commerce’; and (5) the United States could not broaden the scope of the counter-claim beyond what was expressly addressed in the submissions to its Counter-Memorial. 144

76 The United States argued that all issues of jurisdiction and admissibility were resolved with the Court’s order on the admissibility of the counter-claim under Art. 80 of the Rules. The Court did not accept that position, stating instead:

The Court considers that it is open to Iran at this stage of the proceedings to raise objections to the jurisdiction of the Court to entertain the counter-claim or to its admissibility, other than those addressed by the Order of 10 March 1998. When in that Order the Court ruled on the ‘admissibility’ of the counter-claim, the task of the Court at that stage was only to verify whether or not the requirements laid down by Article 80 of the Rules were satisfied, namely, that there was a direct connection of the counter-claim with the subject-matter of the Iranian claims, and that, to the extent indicated in paragraph 102 above, the counter-claim fell within the jurisdiction of the Court. The Order of 10 March 1998 therefore does not address any other question relating to jurisdiction and admissibility, not directly linked to Article 80 of the Rules. This is clear from the terms of the Order, by which the Court found that the counter-claim was admissible ‘as such’; and in paragraph 41 of the Order the Court further stated that: ‘a decision given on the admissibility of a counter-claim taking account of the requirements set out in Article 80 of the Rules in no way prejudges any question which the Court will be called upon to hear during the remainder of the proceedings’ (ibid., p. 205, para. 41). The Court will therefore proceed to address the objections now presented by Iran to its jurisdiction to entertain the counter-claim and to the admissibility thereof.\(^\text{145}\)

Thus, the Court’s view is that the decision reached on jurisdiction at the incidental proceedings phase is not a definitive view on the Court’s jurisdiction over the counter-claim. In the context of the US counter-claim, all the Court had decided in 1998 was that the facts pled by the United States ‘were facts capable of falling within the scope of Article X, paragraph 1, of the 1955 Treaty’ and ‘that the Court had jurisdiction to entertain the United States counter-claim in so far as the facts alleged may have prejudiced the freedoms guaranteed by Article X, paragraph 1’.\(^\text{146}\) Likewise, any issues of admissibility other than the ‘direct connection’ of the counter-claim to the claim may be raised at the merits phase. As it turned out, in Oil Platforms the Court then proceeded to reject each of Iran’s objections to the

Court’s jurisdiction over or the admissibility of the counter-claim.\textsuperscript{147}

78 The same situation arose in \textit{Armed Activities} (DRC/Uganda). At the merits phase, the DRC advanced several objections to the Court’s jurisdiction over and the admissibility of Uganda’s counter-claim. The Court permitted those objections, saying that the ‘enquiry under Article 80 as to admissibility is only in regard to the question whether a counter-claim is directly connected with the subject-matter of the principal claim; it is not an overarching test of admissibility’.\textsuperscript{148} That statement is somewhat curious in that the Court’s analysis of Art. 80 of the Rules also concerns whether there is jurisdiction ‘as such’ over the counter-claim, even in circumstances (such as this case) where no objection was made to jurisdiction in the Art. 80 of the Rules proceeding. In any event, the DRC was permitted to object to the admissibility of the counter-claim due to: waiver; the raising of new claims not specified in the Counter-Memorial; the inability to advance claims on behalf of nonnationals; and the failure to exhaust local remedies. In its judgment on the merits, the Court rejected all of those objections and thus found the counter-claims admissible, except that it declared inadmissible a portion of Uganda’s counter-claims which concerned ‘acts of maltreatment by [DRC] troops of Ugandan nationals not enjoying diplomatic status who were present at Ndjili International Airport as they attempted to leave the country’.\textsuperscript{149} With respect to those individuals, the Court found that Uganda had not established the nationality of the individuals so as to sustain the ability to bring a counter-claim premised on diplomatic protection of persons.\textsuperscript{150}

79 As occurred in both \textit{Oil Platforms} and \textit{Armed Activities} (DRC/Uganda), one type \textsuperscript{148} \textit{Armed Activities case} (DRC/Uganda), \textit{supra}, fn. 23, Judgment, ICJ Reports (2005), pp. 168, 261, para. 273.

\textsuperscript{149} \textit{Ibid.}, p. 276, para. 332.

\textsuperscript{150} \textit{Ibid.}, p. 276, para. 333.
of objection at the merits phase may be that the respondent is expanding the counter-claim beyond the scope of what was pled in the Counter-Memorial. In that regard, the Court stated in Oil Platforms that the same rule applies to counter-claims as applies to claims. That is, the Court will seek to determine whether the new element is ‘a new claim’ or whether it is merely ‘additional evidence relating to the original claim’, bearing in mind that it ‘is well established in the Court’s jurisprudence that the parties to a case cannot in the course of proceedings “transform the dispute brought before the Court into a dispute that would be of a different nature”’.

Where a ‘new’ counter-claim is being presented at the merits phase beyond what was identified in the Counter-Memorial, it appears that the Court will deem such a claim inadmissible. In both Oil Platforms and Armed Activities (DRC/Uganda), the Court did not view the introduction of new elements as transforming the counter-claim in those cases and therefore did not sustain the objection on this issue.

X. Disposition of the Counter-Claim on the Merits

80 If the counter-claim survives the initial proceeding under Art. 80 of the Rules and then further survives any objections to jurisdiction or admissibility that may arise at the merits phase, and is not withdrawn along the way, the Court proceeds to decide the counter-claim on the merits. In each instance where the Court has done so, it first addresses and disposes of the principal claim before turning to the merits of the counter-claim. Both the claim and the counter-claim are then addressed in the same dispositif to the judgment.

In some instances, the counter-claim will be rejected on the merits. Thus, in Rights of US Nationals in Morocco, the Court rejected the US submissions relating to the unlawfulness of the imposition of certain taxes and rejected the US position that customs authorities, when valuing goods, cannot take into account their value in the local Moroccan market, stating that ‘the value of merchandise in the country of origin and its value in the local Moroccan market are both elements in the appraisal of its cash wholesale value delivered at the customhouse’.154 In Land and Maritime Boundary, the Court found that Nigeria had failed to prove the facts that would have supported its counter-claim, and further failed to establish that the conduct in question was attributable to Cameroon.155 In Oil Platforms, the Court found that the United States had failed to prove that the alleged Iranian attacks on vessels in the Persian Gulf violated the ‘freedom of commerce and navigation’ obligations set forth in Art. X, para. 1 of the 1955 Treaty.156

82 In other cases, the counter-claim may succeed on the merits, but be so closely associated with the principal claim that the existence of the counter-claim may not make much difference in the case. Thus, in the Asylum case, the Court agreed with the submission in Peru’s counter-claim that Colombia’s grant of asylum was not in accordance with the applicable asylum convention; however, in denying the principal claim by Colombia (seeking to exercise a right to grant asylum under that convention), the Court had already essentially reached that conclusion.157

83 Yet is possible for a counter-claim to succeed and thereby result in a finding that would not otherwise be possible in the absence of the counter-claim. In Armed Activities (DRC/Uganda), the Court rejected the first category of Uganda’s counter-claims to the effect that the DRC had unlawfully used force against Uganda. The Court upheld, however, much of the second category of Uganda’s counter-claims, finding that the DRC attacked the ‘Ugandan Embassy in Kinshasa, maltreated Ugandan diplomats and other individuals on the Embassy premises, maltreated Ugandan diplomats at Ndjili International Airport’, failed to protect those diplomats, and failed ‘to prevent archives and Ugandan property from being seized from the premises of the Ugandan Embassy’, all in violation of the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations of 1961.\footnote{158} As such, the DRC—the original applicant in the case—was found to be under an obligation to make reparation to Uganda for the injury caused.\footnote{159}

---

D. Evaluation

84 Given the considerable attention in the ICJ Statute and the Rules of the Court to the basic procedures for the filing of a claim by one State against another, it is remarkable that the Statute is silent on the issue of counter-claims, while the Rules are limited to a single article consisting of three short paragraphs. The explanation for such a lack of attention is probably threefold. First, though counter-claims have been available to respondents throughout the life of the PCIJ and ICJ, to date they have been used quite sparingly. If counter-claims become a more significant feature of the Court’s caseload, there may be calls for grounding the regime of counter-claims in the Statute and in more detailed provisions of the Rules. Second, when counter-claims are used by respondents, it is possible to fold them into proceedings that already exist for the claim of the applicant; in other words, the basic procedures used for claims are largely used mutatis mutantis for counter-claims, thereby obviating the need to develop detailed rules for the latter. Third, while there may be some areas of uncertainty in Art. 80 of the Rules, the Court through its jurisprudence has provided considerable content to the meaning of that article, as discussed previously. As such, the regime of counter-claims is a good example of how the Court can develop—incrementally and over time—sensible procedures for handling its docket.

\footnote{158}{Armed Activities case (DRC/Uganda), supra, fn. 23, Judgment, ICJ Reports (2005), pp. 168, 282, para. 345 (12).}

\footnote{159}{Ibid., para. 345 (13).}

85 Overall, the current regime appears well-suited for balancing the interests of the applicant and the respondent. The respondent is able to place before the Court its own grievances with respect to the applicant’s conduct, but is not able to derail the applicant’s claim by presenting matters unrelated to that claim or outside the Court’s jurisdiction. The applicant receives full notice of such grievances, is able to contest whether they are truly related to the applicant’s claim, and otherwise is able to litigate the merits of such grievances just as it would if the counter-claim had been brought as a stand-alone case. In none of the cases involving counter-claims does it appear that the filing of counter-claims had a pernicious effect on the case; rather, in most instances it appears that they allowed the Court to receive a broader range of views on a broader range of issues than might otherwise have occurred.

86 As such, the real value of the regime of counter-claims is that it advances the Court’s role as a central institution for the pacific settlement of disputes. Disputes often arise in a context where both sides believe the other has transgressed international legal norms. The regime of counter-claims allows the Court to consider both sides of the dispute in a single, integrated proceeding, thereby creating the opportunity for the Court to address the dispute in a more holistic fashion. States themselves may be recognizing the value of pursuing counter-claims, since many of the cases in which they have been filed date to just the past 20 years. Given the value to litigants in ‘levelling the playing field’ when they come before the Court, counter-claims at the ICJ may continue to feature significantly in the years to come.
Annex: Filing and Disposition of Counter-Claims 1928-2017

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Case Name and Date of Filing of Counterclaims</th>
<th>Date of Order(s) and Judgment(s) of the Court</th>
<th>Counterclaim admissible?</th>
<th>Counterclaim upheld?</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>A. Permanent Court of International Justice</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1. Case concerning the Factory at Chorzów (Germany v. Poland) Preliminary Counter-Memorial submitted by the Government of Poland on 8 April 1927</td>
<td>Judgment of 13 September 1928, PCIJ, Series A, No. 17, p. 36</td>
<td>Yes</td>
<td>No</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>B. International Court of Justice</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2. Fisheries (United Kingdom v. Norway) Counter-Memorial submitted by the Government of the Kingdom of Norway on 31 July 1950</td>
<td>N/A</td>
<td>Withdrawn</td>
<td>N/A</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
3. Rights of Nationals of the United States of America in Morocco (France v. United States of America)

Counter-Memorial submitted by the Government of the United States of America on 20 December 1951

Judgment of 27 August 1952, ICJ Reports (1952), pp. 176, 203-12

Yes

Partly rejected and partly upheld

4. Oil Platforms (Islamic Republic of Iran v. United States of America)

Counter-Memorial and Counter-claim submitted by the United States of America on 23 June 1997

Yes

No

Withdrawn

N/A

Yes

No

Counter-Memorial submitted by the Federal Republic of Nigeria on 21 May 1999

First and second counter-claims: Yes

Third counter-claim: No

First counter-claim: No; Second counter-claim: Yes

8. Armed Activities on the Territory of the Congo (Democratic Republic of the Congo v. Uganda)

Counter-Memorial submitted by Uganda on 21 April 2001

Yes

No

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>No</th>
<th>Case Description</th>
<th>Counter-Memorial submitted by Party</th>
<th>Decision</th>
<th>Notes</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>10</td>
<td>Jurisdictional Immunities of the State (Germany v. Italy: Greece intervening)</td>
<td>Serbia on 1 December 2009</td>
<td>No</td>
<td>N/A</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Counter-Memorial submitted by Italy on 22 December 2009</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Order of 6 July 2010, ICJ Reports (2010), p. 310</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11</td>
<td>Certain Activities carried out by Nicaragua in the Border Area (Costa Rica v. Nicaragua)</td>
<td>Nicaragua on 6 August 2012</td>
<td>First counter-claim: subsumed after joinder of proceedings; Second and third counter-claims: No Fourth counter-claim: no need to entertain</td>
<td>N/A</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>(case joined with Construction of a Road in Costa Rica (Nicaragua v. Costa Rica) on 17 April 2013)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12</td>
<td>Alleged Violations of Sovereign Rights and Maritime Spaces in the Caribbean Sea (Nicaragua v. Colombia)</td>
<td>Colombia by 17 November 2016</td>
<td>First and second counter-claims: No Third and fourth counter-claims: Yes</td>
<td>Not decided as of 2017</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>