Modern Military Justice: Cases and Materials

Lisa M. Schenck

George Washington University Law School, lschenck@law.gwu.edu

Follow this and additional works at: https://scholarship.law.gwu.edu/faculty_publications

Part of the Law Commons

Recommended Citation

This Book Part is brought to you for free and open access by the Faculty Scholarship at Scholarly Commons. It has been accepted for inclusion in GW Law Faculty Publications & Other Works by an authorized administrator of Scholarly Commons. For more information, please contact spagel@law.gwu.edu.
MODERN MILITARY JUSTICE
CASES AND MATERIALS

Third Edition

Lisa M. Schenck
Associate Dean for Academic Affairs
George Washington University Law School

AMERICAN CASEBOOK SERIES®
WEST ACADEMIC PUBLISHING’S
LAW SCHOOL ADVISORY BOARD

JESSE H. CHOPER
Professor of Law and Dean Emeritus
University of California, Berkeley

JOSHUA DRESSLER
Distinguished University Professor Emeritus, Frank R. Strong Chair in Law
Michael E. Moritz College of Law, The Ohio State University

YALE KAMISAR
Professor of Law Emeritus, University of San Diego
Professor of Law Emeritus, University of Michigan

MARY KAY KANE
Professor of Law, Chancellor and Dean Emeritus
University of California, Hastings College of the Law

LARRY D. KRAMER
President, William and Flora Hewlett Foundation

JONATHAN R. MACEY
Professor of Law, Yale Law School

ARTHUR R. MILLER
University Professor, New York University
Formerly Bruce Bromley Professor of Law, Harvard University

GRANT S. NELSON
Professor of Law Emeritus, Pepperdine University
Professor of Law Emeritus, University of California, Los Angeles

A. BENJAMIN SPENCER
Justice Thurgood Marshall Distinguished Professor of Law
University of Virginia School of Law

JAMES J. WHITE
Robert A. Sullivan Professor of Law Emeritus
University of Michigan
To my family and my students for their consistent support, encouragement, and inspiration.—LMS
This textbook is about the modern military justice system of the United States. It covers court-martial procedures, substantive criminal law, and non-judicial punishment under the Uniform Code of Military Justice (UCMJ), in addition to other administrative and disciplinary measures.

The military justice system serves the Nation as a whole by helping to establish and maintain good order and discipline in the Armed Forces, making our military power more reliable and effective. The system also strives to treat fairly and appropriately the millions of American servicemembers who are subject to it. For these reasons, this textbook is aimed at a wide audience. It is suitable for all law students, whether or not they hope to pursue military careers, and also for non-law students such as cadets, midshipmen, officer candidates, and others who have an interest in the subject of military justice. The book focuses on what is common to all of the Armed Forces—the Air Force, the Army, the Coast Guard, the Marine Corps, and the Navy—while noting certain differences among them. To make this book especially relevant to cadets and midshipmen, it includes several cases arising out of the Service Academies.1 No prior knowledge of military matters, however, is necessary for using this book.

The Third Edition

for free at the website of the Joint Service Committee on Military Justice: https://jsc.defense.gov/.

The Third Edition contains a new chapter concerning the substantive law of rape and other sex crimes under the UCMJ. Because approximately half of all courts-martial now involve such crimes, students of military justice need an introduction to this important and complicated subject. The Third Edition also contains expanded coverage of inappropriate relationships, extramarital sexual conduct, and federal court jurisdiction. The chapter on trial of enemy combatants by Military Commissions has been eliminated. Several new cases have been added.

The Author

Associate Dean Lisa Schenck has become the sole author of the Third Edition. She served on active duty in the U.S. Army Signal Corps and Judge Advocate General’s Corps for more than 25 years, retiring with the rank of colonel. Following various assignments as a military lawyer and assistant professor at the U.S. Military Academy, she was appointed an appellate military judge on the U.S. Army Court of Criminal Appeals. In 2003, she received the Judge Advocates Association’s Outstanding Career Armed Services Award (Army). In 2005, she became the first female Senior Judge on that court. In 2007, the Secretary of Defense appointed her to serve concurrently as an Associate Judge on the U.S. Court of Military Commission Review. After retiring from the military, Dean Schenck served as Senior Advisor to the Defense Task Force on Sexual Assault in the Military Services. She now teaches Military Justice at the George Washington University Law School, where she is also a senior administrator.

Gregory E. Maggs, who was a co-author of the first two editions, became a judge on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Armed Forces in February 2018. To avoid potential conflicts with his new judicial role, he has discontinued his work on this book.

The views expressed in this book are the personal views of the author, and are not intended to represent the views of the U.S. Army, the Department of Defense, or the U.S. government. The textbook contains several cases in which the author has had personal involvement as a military judge. But by including them, she does not mean to suggest that they are the definitive words on the subjects that they address.

Editorial Conventions

Throughout this book the author has used the following editorial conventions. When editing cases, she has used three asterisks (* * *) to indicate an omitted paragraph or paragraphs. The author has used ellipses ( . . . ) to indicate omitted words or sentences within a paragraph. She also has slightly changed the format of certain citations within quoted materials to promote uniformity throughout the textbook. She recommends that anyone citing the materials included in this book consult the original sources. Please note that much of military law was created when the Armed Forces included few female service-members, and the wording of legal sources often reflects this history by not using gender neutral pronouns. Throughout this book, in quoting, describing, and illustrating legal rules, any pronoun in the masculine gender is intended also to include the feminine gender.

Acknowledgements

The author thanks Maggie Leeker, Veronica Sevier, Alexis McClellan, and Erica Geiser, of the George Washington University Law School staff for help in preparing the manuscripts for each edition. She also heartily thanks George Washington Law School students and graduates Elizabeth Barnes, Captain Brandon W. Barnett, Robert Baxter, Karl Brozyna, Tal Castro, Danielle Hernández, Aditya Luthra, and Kenneth Rotter for their extremely helpful research assistance.

The author also thanks Suffolk University Adjunct Professor James E. Gallagher, Michigan State University Adjunct Professor Paul W. Jones, New York University Professor Richard Epstein, and Colonel Robert D. Gifford for suggesting improvements. Finally, the author expresses great appreciation to Louis Higgins of West Academic Publishing for his support and encouragement throughout the process.

The author hopes that instructors and students will find this book both useful and interesting. Please communicate your reactions so that she may make improvements to future editions.

Lisa M. Schenck
Washington, D.C.
March 2019
SUMMARY OF CONTENTS

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Section</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Dedication</td>
<td>iii</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Preface</td>
<td>v</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Summary of Contents</td>
<td>ix</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Table of Contents</td>
<td>xiii</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>List of Charts</td>
<td>xix</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Table of Cases and Other Authorities</td>
<td>xix</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

PART I: INTRODUCTION AND OVERVIEW OF THE MILITARY JUSTICE SYSTEM

Chapter 1. Overview of the Military Justice System

1-1. History of the Military Justice System and Sources of Law ........ 1
1-2. Overview of the System from Start to End ......................................... 11
1-3. Jurisdiction Over Military Persons and Offenses ........................... 31
1-4. Role of the Commander and Unlawful Command Influence .................. 55

Chapter 2. Judge Advocate Professional Responsibility

2-1. Military Lawyers for the Government, the Accused, and Victims .......... 73
2-2. Standards Regarding Advocacy and Sixth Amendment Right to Effective Counsel .................................................. 84
2-3. Supervisory Responsibility .................................................................. 122
2-4. Restrictions in Communications to the Media and Other Third Parties ............................................................ 122

Chapter 3. Alternatives to Adversary Criminal Trials by Courts-Martial

3-1. Administrative Corrective Measures .............................................. 123
3-2. Administrative Separations from the Service .................................... 133
3-3. Nonjudicial Punishment ...................................................................... 144
3-4. Summary Courts-Martial .................................................................... 154

PART II. THE PRETRIAL PHASE OF MILITARY JUSTICE

Chapter 4. Pretrial Issues

4-1. Self-Incrimination and Article 31(b), UCMJ, Rights .......................... 163
4-2. Apprehension and Pretrial Restraint, Confinement, and Punishment ...................................................................................... 172
4-3. Searches Versus Inspections ............................................................ 187
4-4. Immunity: Testimonial, Transactional, De Facto .......................... 216

Chapter 5. Pretrial Procedural Requirements

5-1. Preferral and Forwarding of Charges ............................................. 226
5-2. Article 32, UCMJ, Preliminary Hearings ......................................... 230
5-3. Staff Judge Advocate Pretrial Advice to the Convening Authority ..... 236
5-4. Referral of a Case to Court-Martial ............................................. 241

ix
Chapter 6.  Pretrial Decisions ............................................. 249
6-1.  The Accused's Plea .................................................. 249
6-2.  Forum Options ......................................................... 250
6-3.  Pretrial Agreements .................................................. 252
6-4.  Military Panel (Jury) Requirements and Selection .......... 257

PART III. MOTIONS AND TRIAL PHASE

Chapter 7.  Pretrial Motions and Interlocutory Appeals .......... 265
7-1.  Pretrial Motions in General ........................................ 265
7-2.  Examples of Common Pretrial Motions ......................... 267
7-3.  Article 62 Interlocutory Appeals by the United States ...... 286
7-4.  Petitions for Extraordinary Writs ............................... 295

Chapter 8.  Findings ........................................................ 309
8-1.  Providence Inquiry for Guilty Pleas ............................. 309
8-2.  Instructions on Findings ............................................ 324
8-3.  Findings with Exceptions and Substitutions ................. 330
8-4.  Military Judge's Special Findings ............................... 335

Chapter 9.  Military Sentencing ........................................... 340
9-1.  Introduction and Purposes ........................................ 340
9-2.  Lawful Punishments ................................................ 348
9-3.  Matters in Aggravation and Extenuation and Mitigation .. 358
9-4.  The Death Penalty in the Military ............................. 368

PART IV. POST-TRIAL PROCEDURES

Chapter 10.  Post-Trial Review Procedures .......................... 380
10-1.  Overview .............................................................. 380
10-2.  Matters Submitted by the Crime Victim and the Accused .. 381
10-3.  Convening Authority Action ..................................... 387
10-4.  Post-Trial Processing Time ....................................... 393

Chapter 11.  Appellate Review Procedures ............................ 430
11-1.  Review by the Judge Advocate General ...................... 430
11-2.  Appeal to the Service Courts of Criminal Appeals ........ 431
11-3.  The U.S. Court of Appeals for the Armed Forces and Supreme Court Review ........................................... 437
11-4.  Parole, Boards for Correction of Military Records, and Pardons ...... 442

PART V. SUBSTANTIVE MILITARY CRIMINAL LAW

Chapter 12.  Military Crimes in General .............................. 454
12-1.  Overview of the Punitive Articles .............................. 454
12-2. The General Article—Article 134 and The Federal Assimilative Crimes Act ................................................................. 458
12-3. Military Offenses ............................................................................................................................................................. 475
12-4. Absence and Duty-Related Offenses ............................................................................................................................. 517

Chapter 13. Inappropriate Conduct Offenses ............................................................................................................................... 528
13-1. Conduct Unbecoming an Officer and Gentleman ............................................................................................................ 528
13-2. Fraternization ........................................................................................................................................................................ 546
13-3. Other Improper Relationships ............................................................................................................................................ 558
13-4. Extramarital Sexual Conduct and Other Sexual Improprieties .......................................................................................... 563

Chapter 14. Rape and Other Sex Crimes .................................................................................................................................... 573
14-1. Introduction and Recent History ......................................................................................................................................... 573
14-2. Definitions of Sexual Offenses .......................................................................................................................................... 589
14-3. Evidentiary Issues in Trying Sexual Offenses .................................................................................................................... 595
14-4. Child Sexual Abuse and Child Pornography .................................................................................................................... 604

Chapter 15. Military Defenses ......................................................................................................................................................... 610
15-1. Superior Orders ....................................................................................................................................................................... 610
15-2. Duress ...................................................................................................................................................................................... 631
15-3. Mental Responsibility .............................................................................................................................................................. 632
15-4. The Good Soldier Defense ..................................................................................................................................................... 667

PART VI. EXPANDING MILITARY JUSTICE

Chapter 16. Expanding Military Justice ................................................................................................................................... 679
16-1. Trial of Civilians ................................................................................................................................................................. 679
16-2. Trial of Servicemembers in State and Federal Court ......................................................................................................... 700
16-3. Status of Forces Agreement in Foreign Countries ....................................................................................................... 708
16-4. Courts of Inquiry ................................................................................................................................................................. 715

Index ............................................................................................................................................................................................. 723
Table of Contents

Dedication ................................................................................................................................. iii
Preface ....................................................................................................................................... v
Summary of Contents ............................................................................................................... ix
Table of Contents ...................................................................................................................... xiii
List of Charts .............................................................................................................................. xix
Table of Cases and Other Authorities ..................................................................................... xix

Part I: Introduction and Overview of the Military Justice System

Chapter 1. Overview of the Military Justice System .......................................................... 1
1-1. History of the Military Justice System and Sources of Law ........................................... 1
  United States v. Lazauskas .................................................................................................. 8
1-2. Overview of the System from Start to End ................................................................. 11
  United States v. Tittel ......................................................................................................... 21
  United States v. Schap ......................................................................................................... 24
1-3. Jurisdiction Over Military Persons and Offenses .................................................... 31
  Reid v. Covert ...................................................................................................................... 33
  Solorio v. United States ...................................................................................................... 44
  Overlapping Jurisdiction ...................................................................................................... 50
  United States v. Schneider .................................................................................................. 51
1-4. Role of the Commander and Unlawful Command Influence ................................ 55
  United States v. Boyce ...................................................................................................... 56
  United States v. Baldwin ................................................................................................... 68

Chapter 2. Judge Advocate Professional Responsibility ............................................. 73
2-1. Military Lawyers for the Government, the Accused, and Victims ........................... 73
  United States v. Steele ......................................................................................................... 74
  Separate Military Lawyers for Sexual Assault Victims ................................................... 78
  LRM v. Kastenberg ............................................................................................................. 80
2-2. Standards Regarding Advocacy and Sixth Amendment Right to Effective Counsel ................................................................................................................................. 84
  United States v. Quintanilla ............................................................................................. 85
  Strickland v. Washington ................................................................................................. 93
  United States v. Baker ....................................................................................................... 98
  United States v. Cain ....................................................................................................... 108
2-3. Supervisory Responsibility ............................................................................................. 122
2-4. Restrictions in Communications to the Media and Other Third Parties ................. 122

Chapter 3. Alternatives to Adversary Criminal Trials by Courts-Martial .................. 123
3-1. Administrative Corrective Measures ............................................................................ 123
Chapter 4. Pretrial Issues ................................................................. 163
  4-1. Self-Incrimination and Article 31(b), UCMJ, Rights .................. 163
    United States v. Ramos .......................................................... 165
  4-2. Apprehension and Pretrial Restraint, Confinement, and Punishment ............................................................................ 172
    United States v. Gilchrist ...................................................... 173
    United States v. Cruz ............................................................ 182
  4-3. Searches Versus Inspections ................................................. 187
    Katz v. United States ............................................................. 188
    Government Searches in the Military Context ......................... 193
    United States v. Weston ........................................................ 195
    United States v. Larson .......................................................... 199
    Military Inspections ............................................................... 204
    United States v. Campbell ...................................................... 205
  4-4. Immunity: Testimonial, Transactional, De Facto .................... 216
    United States v. McKeel ......................................................... 217

Chapter 5. Pretrial Procedural Requirements .................................. 226
  5-1. Preferral and Forwarding of Charges ..................................... 226
    United States v. Nix ............................................................... 228
  5-2. Article 32, UCMJ, Preliminary Hearings .............................. 230
    United States v. Payne .......................................................... 233
  5-3. Staff Judge Advocate Pretrial Advice to the Convening Authority .... 236
    United States v. Mercier ....................................................... 237
  5-4. Referral of a Case to Court-Martial ..................................... 241
    Secretary of the Army v. Curry .............................................. 243

Chapter 6. Pretrial Decisions .......................................................... 249
  6-1. The Accused’s Plea ............................................................. 249
  6-2. Forum Options .................................................................... 250
  6-3. Pretrial Agreements ............................................................ 252
    United States v. Dunbar ......................................................... 253
  6-4. Military Panel (Jury) Requirements and Selection .................. 257
    United States v. Bartlett ......................................................... 259
Chapter 7. Pretrial Motions and Interlocutory Appeals

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Section</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>7-1. Pretrial Motions in General</td>
<td>265</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>7-2. Examples of Common Pretrial Motions</td>
<td>267</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Motion for a Speedy Trial</td>
<td>267</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Mizgala</td>
<td>267</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Motion for a Sanity Board</td>
<td>278</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. James</td>
<td>279</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Motion in Limine</td>
<td>282</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Spata</td>
<td>282</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>7-3. Article 62 Interlocutory Appeals by the United States</td>
<td>286</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Daly</td>
<td>287</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Rittenhouse</td>
<td>289</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>7-4. Petitions for Extraordinary Writs</td>
<td>295</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Denedo</td>
<td>295</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>McKinney v. Jarvis</td>
<td>301</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Chapter 8. Findings

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Section</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>8-1. Providence Inquiry for Guilty Pleas</td>
<td>309</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Care</td>
<td>309</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. England</td>
<td>310</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>8-2. Instructions on Findings</td>
<td>324</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Upham</td>
<td>325</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>8-3. Findings with Exceptions and Substitutions</td>
<td>330</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Marshall</td>
<td>331</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>8-4. Military Judge’s Special Findings</td>
<td>335</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Roderick</td>
<td>336</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Chapter 9. Military Sentencing

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Section</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>9-1. Introduction and Purposes</td>
<td>340</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Snelling</td>
<td>340</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>9-2. Lawful Punishments</td>
<td>346</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Gorski</td>
<td>348</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>9-3. Matters in Aggravation and Extenuation and Mitigation</td>
<td>353</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Rosato</td>
<td>358</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Perry</td>
<td>365</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>9-4. The Death Penalty in the Military</td>
<td>368</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Loving v. United States</td>
<td>368</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Part IV. Post-Trial Procedures

Chapter 10. Post-Trial Review Procedures

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Section</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>10-1. Overview</td>
<td>380</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>10-2. Matters Submitted by the Crime Victim and the Accused</td>
<td>381</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Travis</td>
<td>382</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Chapter 11. Appellate Review Procedures ........................................... 430
  11-1. Review by the Judge Advocate General ........................................ 430
  11-2. Appeal to the Service Courts of Criminal Appeals .......................... 431
    United States v. Sales ................................................................. 433
  11-3. The U.S. Court of Appeals for the Armed Forces and Supreme Court Review .......................................................... 437
    Clinton v. Goldsmith ................................................................. 438
  11-4. Parole, Boards for Correction of Military Records, and Pardons ........... 442
    United States v. Pena ................................................................. 444

PART V. SUBSTANTIVE MILITARY CRIMINAL LAW

Chapter 12. Military Crimes in General ............................................. 454
  12-1. Overview of the Punitive Articles ............................................... 454
  12-2. The General Article—Article 134 and the Federal Assimilative Crimes Act .......................................................... 458
    Clauses 1 & 2 of Article 134 ....................................................... 460
    United States v. Fosler ............................................................... 461
    Clause 3 of Article 134 and the Federal Assimilative Crimes Act .......... 469
    United States v. Robbins ............................................................ 470
  12-3. Military Offenses ................................................................. 475
    Contempt Toward Officials ......................................................... 475
    Sanford v. Callan ................................................................. 476
    United States v. Howe ............................................................. 479
    Failing to Obey a Lawful General Order—Article 92 ...................... 485
    United States v. Leverette ......................................................... 486
    United States v. Green ............................................................. 490
    Failing to Obey Other Lawful Order—Articles 92(2), 91(2) ............ 493
    United States v. Warren ........................................................... 494
    Dereliction of Duty & Maltreatment of Subordinates ....................... 496
    United States v. Harman (C.A.A.F.) ......................................... 507
    Disrespect, Willful Disobedience, Insubordinate Conduct—Articles 89-91 ................................................... 510
    United States v. Traxler ............................................................ 513
  12-4. Absence and Duty-Related Offenses ......................................... 517
    Desertion—Article 85 ............................................................. 517
    United States v. Mackey ............................................................ 520
    Absence Without Leave—Article 86 .......................................... 521
Chapter 13. Inappropriate Conduct Offenses ........................................... 528
13-1. Conduct Unbecoming an Officer and Gentleman ....................... 528
   Parker v. Levy ...................................................... 529
   United States v. Conliffe ........................................... 539
   United States v. Lofton ............................................. 542
13-2. Fraternization .......................................................... 546
   United States v. Free ................................................ 547
   United States v. Harwood ........................................... 552
13-3. Other Improper Relationships .............................................. 558
   United States v. Oramas ............................................ 559
13-4. Extramarital Sexual Conduct and Other Sexual Improprieties ...... 563
   United States v. Orellana .......................................... 564
   Indecent Conduct .................................................... 569
   United States v. Rollins ............................................ 570
   Sodomy ............................................................... 572

Chapter 14. Rape and Other Sex Crimes ........................................... 573
14-1. Introduction and Recent History ......................................... 573
   United States v. Robinson .......................................... 573
   Trend of Recent Amendments ..................................... 578
   United States v. Riesbeek .......................................... 579
14-2. Definitions of Sexual Offenses .......................................... 589
   United State v. Schloff ............................................. 591
14-3. Evidentiary Issues in Trying Sexual Offenses ......................... 595
   United States v. Hills ............................................... 597
14-4. Child Sexual Abuse and Child Pornography ............................ 604
   United States v. Warner ............................................. 605

Chapter 15. Military Defenses ..................................................... 610
15-1. Superior Orders ........................................................ 610
   United States v. Calley .............................................. 611
15-2. Duress ............................................................... 631
15-3. Mental Responsibility ................................................ 632
   United States v. Estes ............................................... 633
   United States v. Axelson ........................................... 646
15-4. The Good Soldier Defense ............................................. 667
   United States v. Clemons ........................................... 669
   United States v. Belz ............................................... 676

PART VI. EXPANDING MILITARY JUSTICE

Chapter 16. Expanding Military Justice ......................................... 679
16-1. Trial of Civilians ..................................................... 679

United States v. Rogers .................................................. 521
Missing Movement ....................................................... 526

United States v. Rogers .................................................. 521
Missing Movement ....................................................... 526
United States v. Averette ................................................................. 680
United States v. Ali .......................................................... 683
Trial of Civilians Under the Military Extraterritorial
       Jurisdiction Act of 2000 ................................. 689
United States v. Green .............................................................. 690

16-2. Trial of Servicemembers in State and Federal Court ............... 700
     United States v. MacDonald ............................................. 701

16-3. Status of Forces Agreement in Foreign Countries .................. 708
     Status of Forces Agreement: United States and Republic of Korea ........................................................................ 708
     United States v. Murphy ................................................. 711

16-4. Courts of Inquiry ............................................................. 715
     Report of Court of Inquiry: the Greeneville (SSN 772) and Japanese M/V Ehime Maru ............................. 716

Index ................................................................................. 723
LIST OF CHARTS

The Military Justice Court System .................................................................7
The Court-Martial Process ...............................................................................12
Sample Charge Sheet .......................................................................................14
Comparison of Federal, State, and Military Courts ........................................18
Sample Completed DA Form 2627 .................................................................150
Unauthorized Absences (Articles 85-87, UCMJ) ...........................................519

TABLE OF CASES AND OTHER AUTHORITIES

The principal cases are in bold type. Cases cited or discussed in the text are in Roman type. References are to pages. Cases cited in principal cases and within other quoted materials are not included. Cases in which the United States is a party are included alphabetically by the other party’s name.

CASES
Ali, United States v., 71 M.J. 256 (C.A.A.F. 2012) .......................................683
Allende, United States v., 66 M.J. 142 (C.A.A.F. 2008) ..................................426
Allison, United States v. 63 M.J. 365 (C.A.A.F. 2006) ...................................394
Averette, United States v., 41 C.M.R. 363 (C.M.A. 1970) .................................680
Baker, United States v., 58 M.J. 380 (C.A.A.F. 2003) .....................................98
Baldwin, United States v., 54 M.J. 308 (C.A.A.F. 2001) .................................68
Banks, United States v., 37 M.J. 700 (A.C.M.R. 1993) .................................631
Barry, United States v., 78 M.J. 70 (C.A.A.F. 2018) ......................................579
Bass, United States v., 11 M.J. 545 (A.C.M.R. 1981) ......................................146
Belz, United States v., 20 M.J. 33 (C.M.A. 1985) ........................................667, 676
Bennett, United States v., 21 C.M.R. 223 (C.M.A. 1956) ..............................368
Boyce, United States v., 76 M.J. 242 (C.A.A.F. 2017) .................................56, 579

Bratcher, United States v., 39 C.M.R. 125 (C.M.A. 1969) .............................512
Breeding, United States v. 44 M.J. 345 (1996) .............................................667
Calley v. Callaway, 519 F.2d 184 (5th Cir. 1975) ........................................631
Calley, United States v., 46 C.M.R. 1131 (A.C.M.R. 1973) ...............................611
Campbell, United States v., 41 M.J. 177 (C.M.A. 1994) ...............................205
Campos, United States v., 67 M.J. 330 (C.A.A.F. 2009) ...............................266
Care, United States v., 40 C.M.R. 247 (C.M.A. 1969) .................................310, 318
Clemens, United States v., 16 M.J. 44 (C.M.A. 1983) ...................................669
Coehran v. United States, 770 F.2d 949 (11th Cir. 1985) .............................149
Conliffe, United States v., 67 M.J. 127 (C.A.A.F. 2009) ...............................539
Contreras, United States v., 69 M.J. 120 (C.A.A.F. 2010) ...............................542
Cooke v. Orson, 12 M.J. 335 (C.M.A. 1982) .................................................. 217
Cruz, United States v., 25 M.J. 326 (C.M.A. 1987) ........................................... 182
Czerwonky, United States v., 32 C.M.R. 353 (C.M.A. 1962) ......................... 148
Daly, United States v., 69 M.J. 485 (C.A.A.F. 2011) ..................................... 287
Davis v. United States, 58 M.J. 100 (C.A.A.F. 2003) ................................... 389
Denedo, United States v., 129 S. Ct. 2213 (2009) ......................................... 295
Edmond v. United States, 520 U.S. 651 (1997) ............................................. 8, 122
Fosler, United States v., 70 M.J. 225 (C.A.A.F. 2011) ................................ 461, 564
Free, United States v., 14 C.M.R. 466 (N.B.R. 1953) ................................ 547
Frischholz, United States v., 36 C.M.R. 306 (C.M.A. 1966) ......................... 295
Garcia, United States v., 44 M.J. 496 (C.A.A.F. 1996) ................................ 310
Garretson, United States v., 42 C.M.R. 472 (1970) ...................................... 512
Georgia v. Randolph, 547 U.S. 103 (2006) ................................................... 203
Gibson, United States v., 39 M.J. 319 (C.M.A. 1994) ....................................... 468
Gilbreath, United States v., 74 M.J. 11 (C.A.A.F. 2014) ................................ 171
Girardin, United States v., 50 M.J. 185 (C.A.A.F. 1998) ............................. 341
Grafton v. United States, 206 U.S. 333 (1907) ........................................... 701
Guaglione, United States v., 27 M.J. 268 (C.M.A. 1986) ............................ 538
Harman, United States v., 68 M.J. 325 (C.A.A.F. 2010) ............................. 507
Harrow, United States v., 65 M.J. 190 (C.A.A.F. 2007) ............................... 394, 419
Harwood, United States v., 46 M.J. 26 (C.A.A.F. 1997) ............................. 552
Hennis v. Hemlick, 2012 WL 1200054 (4th Cir. 2012) ................................ 33, 54
Hills, United States v., 75 M.J. 350 (C.A.A.F. 2016) .................................... 597
Holley v. United States, 124 F.3d 1462, 1469 (Fed. Cir. 1997) .................... 134
Howe, United States v., 37 C.M.R. 429 (C.M.A. 1967) ................................ 479
Jacoby, United States v., 29 C.M.R. 244 (C.M.A. 1960) ............................... 4
Johanns, United States v., 20 M.J. 155 (C.M.A. 1985) .................................. 547
Jones, United States v., 39 M.J. 315 (C.M.A. 1994) ..................................... 438
Jones, United States v., 565 U.S. 400 (2012) ............................................... 193
Jones, United States v., 73 M.J. 357 (C.A.A.F. 2014) ................................ 164
Katz, United States v., 389 U.S. 347 (1967) .................................................... 188
Lania, United States v., 9 M.J. 100 (C.M.A. 1980) ...................................... 346
Lanza, United States v., 260 U.S. 377 (1922) ............................................. 701
Larson, United States v., 66 M.J. 212 (C.A.A.F. 2008) ................................ 199
Leverette, United States, 9 M.J. 627 (A.C.M.R. 1980) ................................. 486
Lofton, United States v., 69 M.J. 386 (C.A.A.F. 2011) ................................ 542
Long, United States v., 64 M.J. 57 (C.A.A.F. 2006) .................................... 203
Table of Cases and Other Authorities  xxi

Loving, United States v., 34 M.J. 956 (A.C.M.R. 1992) .........................346
Lucas, United States v., 2 M.J. 834 (A.C.M.R. 1976) .................................345
MacDonald, United States v., 456 U.S. 1 (1982) ......................................701
Mackey, United States v., 46 C.M.R. 754 (N.M.C.M.R. 1972) ..................520
March, United States v., 32 M.J. 740 (A.C.M.R. 1991) .............................557
Marshall, United States v., 67 M.J. 418 (C.A.A.F. 2009) .........................331
McKeel, United States v., 63 M.J. 81 (C.A.A.F. 2006) ..............................217
Mezzanatto, United States v., 513 U.S. 196 (1995) ....................................249
Miller, United States v., 1 M.J. 357 (C.M.A. 1976) ..................................343
Mitchell, United States v., 20 C.M.R. 295 (C.M.A. 1955) .........................495
Mizgala, United States v., 61 M.J. 122 (C.A.A.F. 2005) .........................267
Moreno, United States v., 63 M.J. 129 (C.A.A.F. 2006) .........................394
Mosely, United States v., 1 M.J. 350 (C.M.A. 1976) ................................343
Murphy, United States v., 50 M.J. 4 (C.A.A.F. 1998) ............................711
Nix, United States v., 40 M.J. 6 (C.M.A. 1994) ......................................228
Norvell, United States v., 26 M.J. 477 (C.M.A. 1988) ...............................538
Omas, United States v., 2007 WL 7271934 (Army Ct. Crim. App.) .......559
Payne, United States v., 3 M.J. 354 (C.M.A. 1977) .................................233
Payne, United States v., 73 M.J. 19 (C.A.A.F. 2014) ..............................266
Pena, United States v., 64 M.J. 259 (2007) ........................................444
Perry, United States v., 48 M.J. 197 (C.A.A.F. 1998) .............................365
Pierce, United States v., 27 M.J. 367 (C.M.A. 1989) ..............................152
Quesinberry, United States v., 31 C.M.R. 195 (C.M.A. 1962) ..................364
Ramos, United States v., 76 M.J. 372 (C.A.A.F. 2017) ............................165
Reid v. Covert, 354 U.S. 1 (1957) 33, 42 (C.A.A.F. 2009) .......................249
Riesbeck, United States v., 77 M.J. 154 (C.A.A.F. 2018) .........................579
Robbins, United States v., 52 M.J. 159 (C.A.A.F. 1999) .........................470
Robinson, United States v., 77 M.J. 294 (C.A.A.F. 2018) .......................573
Rockwood, United States v., 52 M.J. 98 (C.A.A.F. 1999) .........................631
Rodriguez, United States v., 67 M.J. 110 (C.A.A.F. 2009) .......................437
Rogers, 54 M.J. 244 (C.A.A.F. 2000) .................................557
Rollins, United States v., 61 M.J. 338 (C.A.A.F. 2005) ...........................570
Rosada, United States v., 32 M.J. 93 (C.M.A. 1991) ..............................358
Rowell, United States v., 1 M.J. 289 (C.M.A. 1976) ..............................286
Sales, United States v., 22 M.J. 305 (C.M.A. 1986) ..............................433
Sanford v. Callan, 148 F.2d 376 (5th Cir. 1945) .................................476
MODERN MILITARY JUSTICE

Schap, United States v., 44 M.J. 512 (A.C.C.A. 1996) ........................................... 24
Schlesinger v. Councilman, 420 U.S. 738 (1975) ......................................................... 2
Schloff, United States v., App.) .... 591
Schneider, United States v., 34 M.J. 639 (A.C.M.R. 1992) ........................................ 51
Secretary of the Army v. Curry, 595 F.2d 873 (D.C. Cir. 1979) .......................... 423
Simmons, United States v., 2009 WL 6835721 (Army Ct. Crim. App. 2009) ........... 710
Smith, United States v., 2 M.J. 567 (A.C.M.R. 1976) ............................................. 527
Smith, United States v., 68 M.J. 445 (C.A.A.F. 2010) ............................................ 458
Snelling, United States v., 14 M.J. 267 (C.M.A. 1982) .............................................. 346
Spata, United States v., 34 M.J. 284 (C.M.A. 1992) .................................................. 282
Steele, United States v., 53 M.J. 274 (C.A.A.F. 2000) .............................................. 74
Swaim v. United States, 165 U.S. 553 (1897) ............................................................... 3
Sweeney, United States v., 70 M.J. 296, 303 (C.A.A.F. 2011) .................................. 266
Talty, United States v., 17 M.J. 1127 (N.M.C.M.R. 1984) ....................................... 631
Tardif, United States v., 57 M.J. 219, (C.A.A.F. 2002) ............................................. 394
Terry v. Ohio, 392 U.S. 1 (1968) ....... 194
Tippit, United States v., 65 M.J. 69 (C.M.A. 2007) ...................................................... 278
Tittel, United States v., 53 M.J. 343 (C.A.A.F. 2000) .............................................. 21
Toth v. Quarles, United States ex rel., U.S. 11 (1955) ............................................. 2, 33
Travis, United States v., 66 M.J. 301 (C.A.C.A.F. 2008) ........................................... 382
Traxler, United States v., 39 M.J. 476 (C.M.A. 1994) ............................................. 513
Upham, United States v., 66 M.J. 83 (C.A.A.F. 2008) ............................................ 325
Wardle, United States v. 58 M.J. 156 (C.A.A.F. 2003) ......................................... 173
Warner, United States v., 73 M.J. 1 (C.A.A.F. 2013) ............................................. 605
Warren, United States v., 13 M.J. 160 (C.M.A. 1982) ......................................... 495
Warren, United States v., 13 M.J. 160 (C.M.A. 1982) ......................................... 494
Weston, United States v., 67 M.J. 390 (C.A.A.F. 2009) ......................................... 195
Wilson, United States v., 28 M.J. 48 (C.M.A. 1989) ........................................... 667
Wolfson, United States v., 36 C.M.R. 722 (A.B.R. 1966) ................................... 126

OTHER AUTHORITIES

Accident-Prone Sub Bumps U.S. Warship, N.Y. Times, Jan. 28, 2002, at A10 ... 722
Adultery: A Comparison of Military Law and State Law and The Controversy This Causes Under Our Constitution And Criminal Justice System, 37 Brandeis L.J. 469, 469-479 & n.4 (1996) .......................................................... 563
Altenburg, John D., & Lisa M. Schenck, Military Rape Fix is No Fix at All, U.S.A. Today, Nov. 6, 2013 .................. 241
Baker, James E., The Importance of Building Fires: Lessons Learned as a Judge on the United States Court of Appeals for the Armed Forces, 15 J.
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Author(s)</th>
<th>Source</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Title</td>
<td>Author(s)</td>
<td>Page(s)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>----------------------------------------------------------------------</td>
<td>---------------------------------------------------------------------------</td>
<td>---------</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Thompson, Mark, The “Good Soldier” Defense Is Mortally Wounded, Time, Mar. 11, 2014</td>
<td>.................................................</td>
<td>668</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Tzu, Sun, The Art of War 4 (Lionel Giles, trans., 2009)</td>
<td>.................................................</td>
<td>265</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>U.S. Dep’t of Army, Reg. 15-30, Army Clemency and Parole Board (Oct. 23, 1998)</td>
<td>.................................................</td>
<td>443</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>U.S. Dep’t of Navy, SECNAVINST 1640.9C, Dept of the Navy Corrections Manual (Jan. 3, 2006)</td>
<td>.................................................</td>
<td>443</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>U.S. Dep’t of Navy, SECNAVINST 5815.3J, Dept of the Navy Clemency and Parole Systems (June 12, 2003)</td>
<td>.................................................</td>
<td>443</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>U.S. Dep’t of the Army, Reg. 27-26, Rules of Professional Conduct for Lawyers (May 1, 1992)</td>
<td>.................................................</td>
<td>122</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>U.S. Dep’t of the Coast Guard, Commandant Instr. M5800.1, Coast Guard Legal Rules of Professional Conduct (June 1, 2005)</td>
<td>.................................................</td>
<td>122</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>U.S. Dep’t of the Navy, JAGINST 5803.1c, Professional Conduct of Attorneys Practicing Under the Cognizance and Supervision of the Judge Advocate General (Nov. 9, 2004)</td>
<td>.................................................</td>
<td>122</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Uniform Code of Military Justice Committee, Annual Report for the period October 1, 2016 to September 30, 2017</td>
<td>.................................................</td>
<td>20</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wiener, Frederick Benays, Are the General Military Articles Unconstitutionally Vague, 54 ABA J. 357, 362 n.44 (1968)</td>
<td>.................................................</td>
<td>368</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Winthrop, William, Military Law and Precedents (2d ed. 1896, 1920 reprint)</td>
<td>.................................................</td>
<td>6</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wright, Donna M., “Though this be Madness, Yet there is Method in it”: A Practitioner’s Guide to Mental Responsibility and Competency to Stand Trial, Army Lawyer, Sep. 1997, at 18</td>
<td>.................................................</td>
<td>282</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Writings of George Washington (Worthington C. Ford, ed., 1889)</td>
<td>.................................................</td>
<td>368</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
MODERN MILITARY JUSTICE
CHAPTER 1

OVERVIEW OF THE MILITARY JUSTICE SYSTEM

1-1. History of the Military Justice System and Sources of Law

In the 1770s, acrimonious disputes arose between the United Kingdom of Great Britain and the inhabitants of some of its colonies in North America. The disagreements concerned taxation, self-governance, individual rights, and western expansion. Harsh measures by the Crown and Parliament prompted rebellious actions by the colonists. Armed conflict erupted on April 18-19, 1775, when British troops garrisoned in Boston unsuccessfully attempted to seize colonial weapons at nearby Lexington and Concord. The British Army was forced to retreat to Boston, where it was besieged by volunteer New England militiamen. Shortly afterward, representatives from the various colonies met in Philadelphia to address the crisis. The gathering of these representatives became known as the Second Continental Congress.

On June 14, 1775, the Second Continental Congress voted to create the Continental Army, a military force that has existed continuously for more than two centuries and that is now known as the United States Army. The Second Continental Congress resolved that ten “companies of expert riflemen be immediately raised” and that “each company, as soon as completed, shall march and join the army near Boston, to be there employed as light infantry, under the command of the chief Officer in that army.” 2 Journals of the Continental Congress 90 (1775). The same day that Congress created the Army, Congress also formed a committee to prepare “a draft of Rules and regulations for the government of the army.” Id. This committee, whose members included George Washington and four others, soon afterward proposed sixty-nine “Articles of War” based on British and colonial military law. Id. at 112-123.

These Articles of War, which Congress approved on June 30, 1775, specified offenses that could be tried by a court-martial. Here are two typical examples:

Art. VII. Any officer or soldier, who shall strike his superior officer, or draw, or offer to draw, or shall lift up any weapon, or offer any violence against him, being in the execution of his office, on any pretence whatsoever, or shall disobey any lawful commands of his superior officer, shall suffer such punishment as shall, according to the nature of his offence, be ordered by the sentence of a general court-martial.

Art. VIII. Any non-commissioned officer, or soldier, who shall desert, or without leave of his commanding officer, absent himself from the troop or company to which he belongs, or from any detachment of the same, shall, upon being convicted thereof, be punished according to the nature of his offence, at the discretion of a general court-martial.

Id. at 113.

On June 20, 1775, the Second Continental Congress appointed George Washington to be the “General and Commander in chief, of the army of the United Colonies, and of all the forces now raised, and to be raised, by them.” Id. at 100-101. Just a few days later, on June 29, 1775, Washington asked Congress to appoint a Harvard-educated and successful Boston lawyer, William Tudor, to be the Judge Advocate of the Continental Army, the Army’s top legal officer. John Marshall, who later would become Chief Justice of the United States, served as the Deputy Judge Advocate of the Army. Among the 15 or so other judge advocates in the Army during the Revolution, several subsequently became members of the House of Representatives or Senate and one became a governor. See The Army Lawyer: The History of the Judge Advocate General’s Corps 1775-1975 10-12, 23-24 (1975).

Why was it immediately necessary for the Second Continental Congress to create a military justice system for the new Army? Why did the Army immediately need extremely capable lawyers among its officers? These questions traditionally have yielded two standard answers.

One answer concerns the need for military discipline. As the Supreme Court has explained, a separate military law is needed because the military is “...a specialized society separate from civilian society” with “laws and traditions of its own [developed] during its long history.” Parker v. Levy, 417 U.S. [733, 743 (1973)]. ... To prepare for and perform its vital role, the military must insist upon a respect for duty and a discipline without counterpart in civilian life. The laws and traditions governing that discipline have a long history; but they are founded on unique military exigencies as powerful now as in the past.

The second answer concerns mobility. The military often operates where civil authority does not exist. When deployed against enemies, whether in the Middle East, Asia, Europe, or elsewhere, U.S. Armed Forces must carry their justice system with them. They cannot postpone addressing disciplinary problems until the fighting stops and all can go home. The Supreme Court has explained: “Court-martial jurisdiction sprang from the belief that within the military ranks there is need for a prompt, ready-at-hand means of compelling obedience and order.” United States ex rel. Toth v. Quarles, 350 U.S. 11 (1955).
Points for Discussion

1. How do the offenses stated in Articles VII and VIII of the 1775 Articles of War illustrate the idea that a separate military law is required because of the unique need for order and discipline in the military?

2. During the Revolutionary War, who would have tried soldiers for offenses if not courts-martial? Who would have assisted with the legal issues presented if not military lawyers? Are courts-martial still needed to provide “ready-at-hand” justice?

More than two hundred years have passed since 1775, but much of the original military justice system remains the same. Servicemembers are still tried by court-martial. Most of the original military offenses in the Articles of War approved by the Continental Congress remain offenses today. The Armed Forces still use military lawyers called judge advocates to implement the military justice system. Military proceedings are still mobile, with courts-martial being held around the world wherever U.S. Armed Forces are located.

But there have been several important developments and improvements in military law. The military law governing the Army, Navy, Marines, Coast Guard, and Air Force has been largely unified since 1950. This unification brought about a modern appellate system for review of courts-martial decisions. Military judges have presided over general courts-martial and nearly all special courts-martial since 1969. The rules of evidence applicable to courts-martial have been codified since 1984.

The aim of this casebook is to outline and explain the modern military justice system. The first subject addressed is the basic sources of military law, which you will see throughout this text.

The Constitution

The Constitution addresses military justice in several provisions. Article I, § 8, clause 14 gives Congress the power to “make Rules for the Government and Regulation of the land and naval Forces.” Pursuant to this power, Congress has established offenses that may be tried by court-martial and procedures for conducting these trials. Two cases in this chapter consider the scope of this power in some depth.

In addition, Article II, § 2, clause 1 makes the President the “Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States, and of the Militia of the several States, when called into the actual Service of the United States.” Pursuant to this provision the President has the power, even without a specific legislative grant of authority, to exercise all of the powers military commanders have traditionally enjoyed. These powers include convening courts-martial for trying servicemembers and military commissions for trying war criminals. See Swaim v. United States, 165 U.S. 553, 558 (1897) (“[I]t is within the power of the president of the United States, as commander in chief, to validly convene a general court-martial” even in circumstances not authorized by Congress);

The Constitution addresses the rights of the accused in a number of provisions in the Bill of Rights. An important question has been the extent to which the Bill of Rights protects servicemembers. The Fifth Amendment to the Constitution expressly does not require a grand jury indictment “in cases arising in the land or naval forces, or in the Militia, when in actual service in time of War or public danger.” But the courts have held that most other provisions of the Bill of Rights do apply to servicemembers. See United States v. Jacoby, 29 C.M.R. 244, 246-47 (C.M.A. 1960) (“the protections in the Bill of Rights, except those which are expressly or by necessary implication inapplicable, are available to the members of our armed forces”). Further discussion of these matters appears in later chapters.

The Uniform Code of Military Justice

Prior to 1950, military justice varied from Service to Service. The Army and Navy, in particular, had separate laws, customs, and practices. In 1950, however, Congress enacted the Uniform Code of Military Justice (UCMJ) for the purpose of creating a single, comprehensive military justice system for all servicemembers. The UCMJ is divided into “articles” and codified at 10 U.S.C. § 801 to § 946a.

Articles 77-134, UCMJ, 10 U.S.C. §§ 877-934, closely resemble the original articles of war adopted by the Second Continental Congress. They contain the so-called “punitive articles,” the provisions that define the various crimes that courts-martial may try. For example, just as Article VII from the 1775 Articles of War (quoted above) made it a crime to strike a superior officer, Article 89(b), UCMJ, 10 U.S.C. § 889(b), now provides:

(b) ASSAULT.—Any person subject to this chapter who strikes that person’s superior commissioned officer or draws or lifts up any weapon or offers any violence against that officer while the officer is in the execution of the officer’s office shall be punished—

(1) if the offense is committed in time of war, by death or such other punishment as a court-martial may direct; and

(2) if the offense is committed at any other time, by such punishment, other than death, as a court-martial may direct.

Article 90, UCMJ, 10 U.S.C. § 890, also like Article VII of the 1775 Articles of War, makes willfully disobeying a superior officer a crime. Similarly, Articles 85 and 86, UCMJ, 10 U.S.C. §§ 885-886, like Article VIII of the original Articles of War, address the subjects of desertion and being absent without leave.

One can see in these and other provisions that most of the disciplinary problems facing the military two hundred years ago remain issues today. But the UCMJ also contains new provisions aimed at modern forms of misconduct, like drunk driving, see id. Art. 113, UCMJ, 10 U.S.C. § 913, or wrongful drug use, see id. Art. 112a, UCMJ, 10 U.S.C. § 912a, that were not known in 1775. We will consider the punitive articles in later chapters of this book.

Articles 30–76, UCMJ, 10 U.S.C. §§ 830–876, address pre-trial, trial, post-trial, and appellate procedures. These sections, however, contain only the broad outlines of how the military justice system is to work. The UCMJ leaves it to the President to specify the details by promulgating rules of evidence and procedure. Article 36(a), UCMJ, 10 U.S.C. § 836(a), one of the most important provisions in the UCMJ, states in part:

Pretrial, trial, and post-trial procedures, including modes of proof, for cases arising under this chapter triable in courts-martial, military commissions and other military tribunals, and procedures for courts of inquiry, may be prescribed by the President by regulations which shall, so far as he considers practicable, apply the principles of law and the rules of evidence generally recognized in the trial of criminal cases in the United States district courts, but which may not, except as provided in chapter 47A of this title, be contrary to or inconsistent with this chapter.

Pursuant to this provision, the President has issued executive orders establishing the Rules for Courts-Martial and the Military Rules of Evidence. These rules appear in a very important government publication called the Manual for Courts-Martial, which is discussed below. The President also has authority under Article 56, UCMJ, 10 U.S.C. § 856, to establish the maximum limits for punishment for various offenses.

Other articles of the UCMJ address apprehension and restraint, 10 U.S.C. §§ 807–814, nonjudicial punishment, id. § 815, the composition of courts-martial, id. §§ 822–29, and general and miscellaneous other matters, id. §§ 801–805, 835–841.

The Manual for Courts-Martial

The Manual for Courts-Martial (MCM) has been called the military lawyer’s Bible. It includes five Parts plus numerous appendices. Part I is a short explanatory preamble. Parts II and III contain the Rules for Courts-Martial Procedure (R.C.M.) and Military Rules of Evidence (M.R.E.). These rules resemble the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure and the Federal Rules of Evidence, and largely serve the same function. Interspersed among these rules are helpful but non-binding “discussions” of the rules. Court-martial procedures are different in many ways from those in civilian courts, but the rules of evidence are largely the same. Accordingly, once a trial by court-martial gets underway, it has much the same feel as a civilian criminal trial.

Part IV of the MCM contains what amounts to a guide to the UCMJ’s punitive articles. It quotes the text of each offense, identifies the elements of the offense, explains the offense, lists lesser included offenses, and provides sample specifications to be used for charging an accused servicemember. Military lawyers and judges rely very heavily on Part IV to determine exactly what the evidence must show for a court-martial to find someone guilty.

Part V concerns nonjudicial punishment, a subject that is addressed in Chapter 3 of this casebook. The rest of the MCM contains various important appendices, including copies of the Constitution and UCMJ, a table of maximum penalties, and helpful analyses of the procedural and evidentiary rules.

Service Regulations

Each Service also has promulgated regulations that address various aspects of the military justice system. Army Regulation 27-10, Military Justice, for example, states numerous policies concerning subjects such as the assignment defense counsel, military justice within the reserve components, and so forth. Although these Service regulations do not directly control the conduct d of a court-martial trial, they do affect many important aspects of the military justice system. We will see several examples in subsequent chapters.

Reported Judicial Decisions

The chart below illustrates the structure of the military justice court system.

Subject to certain exceptions, courts-martial—the trial courts of the Armed Forces—generally prepare complete records of trial, including a complete verbatim transcript of the entire proceeding from start to finish. See R.C.M. 1114.

But courts-martial rarely issue published opinions. Published opinions, however, are prepared by the three levels of appellate courts that may review the results of a court-martial.

Secondary Sources

Many excellent secondary sources cover the military justice system. Two publications are especially helpful. The Military Judges’ Benchbook, Department of Army Pamphlet 27-9, is an instructional guide for the conduct of trials.

This book is available online at the U.S. Army Publishing Directorate <www.armypubs.army.mil>. It contains model “scripts” for most parts of a court-martial, panel instructions, and many other materials. The best historical source is William Winthrop, Military Law and Precedents (2d ed. 1896, 1920 reprint), which courts often consult when deciding constitutional issues.

It is available at the Library of Congress’s website <www.loc.gov/rr/frd/Military_Law/military-legal-resources-home.html>.
As discussed more fully in subsequent chapters, an appeal from a court-martial goes first to one of the four Service Courts of Criminal Appeals—the Air Force Court of Criminal Appeals, the Army Court of Criminal Appeals, the Coast Guard Court of Criminal Appeals, or the Navy-Marine Corps Court of Criminal Appeals. All of the decisions they designate as publishable are included in West’s Military Justice Reporter. Military lawyers constantly look to and cite these decisions because they often answer issues arising under the UCMJ, the Rules for Courts-Martial and Military Rules of Evidence.

Decisions of the Service Courts of Criminal Appeals are subject to discretionary review by the United States Court of Appeals for the Armed Forces. Decisions of the Court of Appeals for the Armed Forces (or C.A.A.F.) are also published in West’s Military Justice Reporter. From the Court of Appeals for the Armed Forces, litigants may petition the U.S. Supreme Court for review by writ of certiorari. The Supreme Court’s decisions appear in the United States Reports.

The military judges and members of the courts-martial for all Services are uniformed servicemembers. The judges of the Air Force, Army, and Navy-Marine Corps Courts of Criminal Appeals are JAG officers, but the Coast Guard Court of Criminal Appeals includes civilians. The Supreme Court has upheld the constitutionality of this arrangement. See Edmond v. United States, 520 U.S. 651 (1997).

One initially challenging aspect of researching military justice cases is that the names of the military courts have changed over time. Prior to 1994, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Armed Forces was called the Court of Military Appeals. The Courts of Criminal Appeals for the various Services have undergone two name changes. Prior to 1994, they were called Courts of Military Review, and prior to 1968, they were called Boards of Review (i.e., the Army Board of Review became the Army Court of Military Review, and then later became the Army Court of Criminal Appeals). Prior to 1951, there was no court equivalent to the Court of Appeals for the Armed Forces and the precursors to the Boards of Review were considerably different in structure and function.

The following case illustrates how parties and judges sometimes may dispute what is and is not a binding source of military law.

UNITED STATES v. LAZAUSKAS 62 M.J. 39 (C.A.A.F. 2005)

Judge CRAWFORD delivered the opinion of the Court.

In March 2001, a confidential informant reported to the law enforcement officials at Lackland Air Force Base that Appellant was selling and using ecstasy. After the controlled purchase of ecstasy by the confidential informer, follow-up inquiries led to the discovery of a number of witnesses who stated that Appellant [Stephen J. Lazauskas, Airman Basic, U.S. Air Force] used drugs in February, March, April, and May 2001, at various times both on and off the installation.

At his arraignment, Appellant made a motion to dismiss the charges against him based on a violation of his right to speedy trial under Rule for Courts–Martial (R.C.M.) 707, Article 10, UCMJ, 10 U.S.C. § 810 (2000), and the Sixth Amendment. The military judge denied his motion on all grounds.

* * *

[One] period of time in dispute is a six-day continuance allowed during an Article 32 hearing [from August 8-13]. The convening authority appointed an investigating officer for the Article 32 hearing, and in the Appointment Memorandum stated the officer was “delegated the authority to grant any reasonably requested delays of the Article 32 investigation.” . . . Two days prior to the date originally scheduled for the Article 32 hearing, the Government representative provided the military defense counsel with a list of eight witnesses the Government expected to testify at the Article 32 hearing. . . . At the Article 32 hearing, six of these witnesses testified; however, two witnesses were on leave. The defense then requested the witnesses and objected to taking their testimony over the telephone. Based on the defense objection, the Article 32 investigating officer delayed the hearing until August 13, 2001, to procure their live testimony. . . .

* * *

. . . Under R.C.M. 707(c), all pretrial delays approved by the convening authority are excludable so long as approving them was not an abuse of the convening authority’s discretion. It does not matter which party is responsible.

The discussion pertaining to this rule provides: “Prior to referral, the convening authority may delegate the authority to grant continuances to an Article 32 investigating officer.” R.C.M. 707(a)(1) discussion.

Additionally, where, as here, the convening authority has delegated to an investigating officer the “authority to grant any reasonably requested delays of the Article 32 investigation,” then any delays approved by the Article 32 investigating officer also are excludable.

Thus, when an investigating officer has been delegated authority to grant delays, the period covered by the delay is excludable from the 120–day period under R.C.M. 707. If the issue of speedy trial under R.C.M. 707 is raised before the military judge at trial, the issue is not which party is responsible for the delay but whether the decision of the officer granting the delay was an abuse of discretion. . . .

. . . R.C.M. 405(g)(1)(A) provides that the parties are entitled to the presence of witnesses who have relevant testimony and the evidence is “not cumulative.” However, R.C.M. 405(g)(4)(B) provides that the investigating officer may take sworn statements of unavailable witnesses over the telephone. The first period of time involved the delay to obtain the personal testimony of two witnesses who were on leave. The investigating officer, under the authority delegated to him by the convening authority, granted the delay. As to this period, the military judge found that:

[A]t some point during the Article 32 hearing, the defense learned that several witnesses it believed the government would be calling live were actually going to be called telephonically. The defense objected to their being called telephonically and the Article 32 hearing was delayed so that the defense could question them when they were personally available which was on 13 August 2001.
We hold that the military judge did not abuse his discretion in excluding this delay.

* * *

GIERKE, Chief Judge (concurring in the result):

The discussion to R.C.M. 707(c)(1) states that “[p]rior to referral, the convening authority may delegate the authority to grant continuances to an Article 32 investigating officer.” [Although the court relies on this statement, the] . . . discussion does not definitively resolve this issue for two reasons. First, the authority to grant a continuance is not necessarily the same as the authority to exclude the resulting delay from Government accountability. A rational military justice system could give the investigating officer the power to grant delays but reserve for other officials the power to exclude such delay from Government accountability. . . .

Second, the discussion accompanying the Rules for Courts–Martial, while in the Manual for Courts–Martial, United States (2002 ed.) (MCM), is not part of the presidentially-prescribed portion of the MCM. The MCM expressly states that it consists of its “Preamble, the Rules for Courts-Martial, the Military Rules of Evidence, the Punitive Articles, and Nonjudicial Punishment Procedures.” Absent from this list are the discussion accompanying the Preamble, the Rules for Courts-Martial, and the Punitive Articles, as well as the MCM’s appendices, including the MCM’s drafters’ analysis. As Professor Gregory E. Maggs helpfully explains, “The President played no role in preparing these supplementary materials, and he did not promulgate them by executive order; on the contrary, these materials represent only the beliefs of staff personnel who worked on the Manual.”5 So, as Professor Maggs concludes, the courts “do not violate the principle of deference to the President when they disagree with them.”6

Nevertheless, I agree with the majority opinion that the time was properly excluded. . . .

* * *

. . . I would recognize that after charges have been referred, the Government may seek a ruling from the military judge retroactively excluding pre-referral delay from Government accountability. To rule otherwise would elevate form over substance. If the time should be excluded from Government accountability, a different result should not arise merely because a specific official did not bless the delay when it occurred. And allowing a military judge to retroactively exclude pre-referral delay from Government accountability is consistent with R.C.M. 707(c) because the pretrial delay would be “approved by a military judge.”

---

6 Id.
In this case, the military judge’s ruling approved the pretrial delay. That ruling was neither unreasonable nor an abuse of discretion. Therefore, the time was properly excluded from Government accountability.

* * *

Points for Discussion

1. How many different sources of military law are cited in this short opinion?

2. Is the majority opinion’s reliance on the “discussion” of R.C.M. 707, which is included in the MCM improper if the discussion is not binding as Judge Gierke says?

1-2. Overview of the System from Start to End

With this background, consider now how the modern military justice system might handle a violation of the UCMJ. The “Court-Martial Process” chart (on the following page) shows the many steps in the process from start to finish. Perhaps the best way to understand this chart is by considering a hypothetical.

The following imaginary facts draw in part upon sample forms in an appendix to the MCM: Suppose that at 0630 on 15 July 2007, Company A of the 61st Infantry Brigade, garrisoned at Fort Blank in Missouri, called roll. All were present or accounted for except Private First Class (PFC) Reuben J. James, who was absent without leave. PFC James’s squad leader immediately asked other members of the squad if they knew where he was. No one knew, but one soldier said, “I bet PFC James is off post buying drugs.” When the sergeant asked why he thought so, the soldier replied: “Three days ago, PFC James showed me 10 grams of marijuana that he had bought. I imagine he is out looking for some more.”

The squad leader informed the platoon sergeant and platoon leader, who told the company commander, Captain (CPT) Jonathan E. Richards. Richards relayed the information to the Military Police, who immediately began looking for PFC James. They apprehended him a few hours later as he tried to reenter Fort Blank through the main gate. When the MPs searched his person, they found 10 grams of vegetable matter which a screening test subsequently determined to be marijuana. The processes of the military justice system had begun.
The Court-Martial Process

Following The Court-Martial Process Chart, you can see that once PFC James has been apprehended, CPT Richards had a few important decisions to make.

Offense occurs leads to Apprehension (RCM 302) or Initial report (RCM 302). If Pretrial Restraint is to be considered, a decision must be made. The Immediate Cdr disposition (RCM 306/402) involves:
1. No action
2. Admin. Action
3. NJP (Art. 15)
4. Prefer charges and forward (RCM 927)

SCMCA disposition (RCM 403) includes:
1. No action/Dismiss
2. Admin. Action
3. NJP (Art. 15)
4. Forward charges to SPCMCA (RCM 401)
5. Return charges to Co. Cdr
6. Convene SCM (See RCM 1302)

SPCMCA disposition (RCM 404) follows:
1. No action/Dismiss
2. Admin. Action
3. NJP (Art. 15)
4. Return charges to SCMCA
5. Convene SPCM (RCM 904)
6. Convene Art. 32 investigation (RCM 405)
7. Forward charges to GCMCA

Art. 32 hearing (RCM 406) leads to Staff Judge Advocate (RCM 406), where:
1. Review charges and 32 report
2. Provide advice to CA on disposition

SPCM or EDC - SPCM

Appellate Action (RCM 1112) includes:
1. JA review (RCM 1201)
2. TJAG review (RCM 1201)
3. CCA review (RCM 1203)
4. CAAF review (RCM 1204)
5. Supreme Court (RCM 1205)

CA Action (RCM 1107) involves:
1. Approve findings or dismiss findings
2. Approve sentence
3. Mitigate sentence
4. Disapprove sentence

Post-Trial Matters (RCM 1101-1114) contains:
1. Results of trial
2. Authenticate record of trial
3. Clemency (RCM 1105)
4. SJAR (RCM 1105a)
5. Sentence
6. Announce of Sentence

Court-Martial (RCMs 901-1011) follows:
1. Assignment
2. NJP (Art. 15)
3. Referral to SCM/SPCM
4. Return charges to SCM/SPCM
5. Refer charges to GCM

GCMCA disposition (RCM 601) concludes.

Note: The process outlined here is subject to exceptions and special rules, especially in sexual assault cases.
The first decision was whether to impose “pretrial restraint.” Under R.C.M. 304, pretrial restraint “may consist of conditions on liberty, restriction in lieu of arrest, arrest, or confinement.” After consulting with a military attorney, CPT Richards decided to order PFC James not to leave the confines of the post, a typical restriction imposed on soldiers who have gone absent without leave for a brief time.

As PFC James’s immediate commander, CPT Richards also had to decide how to dispose of the apparent AWOL and marijuana offenses. Military commanders have considerable discretion in such questions because upon them falls the responsibility of deciding what is necessary for discipline within their units. According to R.C.M. 306, Captain Richards had several options. One option would have been to take no action. That choice might be appropriate for a trivial or technical violation of the UCMJ, or where the commander feels the evidence is too lacking to proceed. But CPT Richards felt that drug use leading a soldier to miss duty required a more forceful response.

A second option under R.C.M. 306 would have been to address the misconduct with “administrative corrective measures,” such as counseling, admonitions, reprimands, exhortations, disapprovals, criticisms, censures, reproaches, rebukes, or extra military instruction. While more than nothing, CPT Richards decided that administrative corrective measures were still not enough of a response to the alleged misconduct.

A third option would have been to address the misconduct with “nonjudicial punishment.” Also as described in Chapter 3, Article 15, UCMJ, 10 U.S.C. § 815, empowers the commander to impose minor punishments on soldiers for violations of the UCMJ, without trying them by court-martial unless the accused insists on a court-martial. While offenses disposed of under Article 15 are “criminal” offenses, their level of disposition does not result in a criminal conviction, and the permissible punishments are limited. For example, CPT Richards might have ordered a forfeiture of pay or a period of additional duty as a punishment for the misconduct. But again, CPT Richards thought the apparent offenses called for something more.

Accordingly, CPT Richards chose a fourth option, namely, “preferring” charges against PFC James so that he could be tried by a court-martial. Under RCM 307, a person prefers charges by putting them in writing, stating that he or she has personal knowledge of or has investigated the matters set forth in the charges and specifications, and by signing them under oath. The following sample form from the MCM, called a “Charge Sheet,” illustrates CPT Richards’s action in this hypothetical story.
CHARGE SHEET

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>L. PERSONAL DATA</th>
<th>2. BSN</th>
<th>3. GRADE OR RANK</th>
<th>4. PAY GRADE</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>James, Reuben J.</td>
<td>111-1111</td>
<td>E-3</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>5. UNIT OF ORGANIZATION</td>
<td></td>
<td>6. CURRENT SERVICE</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Co A, 1st Battalion, 61st Inf. Bde., Fort Blank, MO</td>
<td></td>
<td>a. INITIAL DATE</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>1 April 2006</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>b. TERM</td>
<td>3 years</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>7. PAY PER MONTH</th>
<th>8. NATURE OF RESTRAINT OF ACCUSED</th>
<th>9. DATES IMPOSED</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Basic</td>
<td>Leave/Foreign Duty</td>
<td>Total</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1,534.00</td>
<td>0.00</td>
<td>1,534.00</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

B. CHARGES AND SPECIFICATIONS

10. CHARGE: VIOLATION OF THE UCMJ, ARTICLE 112a

SPECIFICATION:

In that Private First Class Reuben J. James, U.S. Army, Company A, 1st Battalion, 61st Infantry Brigade, Fort Blank, Missouri, did, on or about 15 July 2007, without authority, absent himself from his unit, to wit: Company A, 1st Battalion, 61st Infantry Brigade, located at Fort Blank, Missouri, and did remain so absent until on or about 10 July 2007.

Charge II: Violation of the UCMJ, Article 112a

In that Private First Class Reuben J. James, U.S. Army, Company A, 1st Battalion, 61st Infantry Brigade, Fort Blank, Missouri, did, on or about 12 July 2007, wrongfully possess 10 grams of marijuana.

III. PRESENCE

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>11a. NAME OF ACCUSER</th>
<th>11b. GRADE</th>
<th>11c. ORGANIZATION OF ACCUSER</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Richards, Jonathan E.</td>
<td>CPT</td>
<td>Co A, 1st Bn, 61st Inf Bde.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

AFFIDAVIT: Before me, the undersigned, equipped by law to administer oath in cases of this character, personally appeared the above named accused this 1st day of August, 2007, and signed the foregoing charges and specifications under oath that he/she is a person subject to the Uniform Code of Military Justice and that he/she either has/had personal knowledge of or has investigated the matters set forth therein and that the same are true to the best of his/her knowledge and belief.

1st Bn, 61st Inf Bde.

SIGNATURES

With M. Wilson

DD FORM 456, MAY 2000

PREVIOUS EDITION IS OBSOLETE
CH. 1  OVERVIEW OF THE MILITARY JUSTICE SYSTEM  15

12. On 2 August 2007, the accused was informed of the charges against him/her and of the names of the accuser(s) known to the (See R.C.M. 308[b]). (See R.C.M. 308 if notification cannot be made.)

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Jonathan E. Richards</th>
<th>Co A, 1st Bn, 61st Inf Bde</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Typed Name of Immediate Commander</td>
<td>Organization of Immediate Commander</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>O-3/CPT</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Signature</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

13. The sworn charges were received at 1100 hours, 2 August 2007 at 1st Bn, 61st Inf Bde

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>OFFICER EXERCISING SUMMARY COURT-MARTIAL JURISDICTION: See R.C.M. 5037</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Will M. Wilson</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Typed Name of Officer</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>CPT</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Grade</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Signature</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

14. DESIGNATION OF COMMAND OF CONVENCING AUTHORITY

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>61st Infantry Brigade</th>
<th>Fort Blank, Missouri</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Designation of Command or Convening Authority</td>
<td>2 August 2007</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Referral for trial to the court-martial convened by CMCO number 12 dated

1 August 2007, subject to the following instructions:

None.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Carl E. Nevert</th>
<th>Commander, 61st Infantry Brigade</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Typed Name of Officer</td>
<td>Official Capacity of Officer Signing</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>O-6/COL</td>
<td>Grade</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Signature</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

15. On 8 August 2007, I caused to be served a copy hereof on each of the above named accused.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Hamilton Burger</th>
<th>CPT, JAGC</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Typed Name of Trial Counsel</td>
<td>Grade or Rank of Trial Counsel</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Signature</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

FOOTNOTES. 1: When an appropriate commander signs personally, inapplicable words are stricken.
2: See R.C.M. 501(a) concerning instructions. If none, so state.

DD FORM 458 (BACK), MAY 2003
Box 10 of the Charge Sheet shows that CPT Richards formally accused PFC James of one specification of being absent without leave in violation of Article 86, UCMJ, 10 U.S.C. § 886, and one specification of possessing marijuana in violation of Article 112a, UCMJ, 10 U.S.C. § 912a. In box 11, CPT Richards signed the charges under oath. The reverse side of the form shows what happened next.

As indicated in box 12, CPT Richards informed PFC James of the charges against him. Box 13 shows that the form was forwarded to an unnamed officer who was designated as the “Summary Court-Martial Convening Authority” for the 1st Battalion of the 61st Infantry Brigade.

As shown on The Court-Martial Process Chart, the Summary Court-Martial Convening Authority also had several choices. Under R.C.M. 403, he or she could dismiss the charges or forward the charges to a subordinate or superior commander for disposition. Alternatively, he or she could refer the charges to a “summary court-martial.”

As discussed at considerable length later in this book, there are three types of courts-martial: a summary court-martial, a special court-martial, or a general court-martial. See R.C.M. 201(f). These three types of courts-martial differ in the formality of their procedures and the range of penalties that they may impose.

A summary court-martial is a very informal proceeding that takes place without a military judge or a prosecutor. Instead, a junior officer typically serves alone and hears the evidence. Findings of guilt are not considered criminal convictions. The sentences that can be imposed are modest, and vary according to the rank of the accused. Chapter 3 considers summary courts-martial in more depth.

A special court-martial is an adversary criminal trial, almost always presided over by a military judge, with both the government and the accused represented by counsel. Witnesses testify according to regular rules of evidence, and the trial follows very formal procedural rules—much like any state or federal criminal trial. The maximum penalties that a special court-martial may impose are a bad-conduct discharge, one year of confinement, and forfeiture of two-thirds pay and benefits for one year. A rough analogy in civilian practice is that a special court-martial is typically used for misdemeanors.

A convening authority also has the power to refer charges to a new kind of special court-martial that consists of a military judge alone, with no option for the accused to request a trial by members. See Art. 16(c)(2)(A), UCMJ. This new type of court-martial, which some military lawyers are calling a “special-

---

1 Article 19, UCMJ, does not require pretrial advice from the staff judge advocate prior to the convening of a special court-martial empowered to impose a bad-conduct discharge. Under stricter Army Regulations, however, an Army Special Court-Martial Convening Authority has the power to convene a special court-martial with the power to adjudge a bad-conduct discharge only if he receives pretrial advice from the staff judge advocate.
special” court-martial and others are calling a “short-martial,” has limited sentenc- ing authority: “Neither a bad-conduct discharge, nor confinement for more than six months, nor forfeiture of pay for more than six months may be ad- judged if charges and specifications are referred to a special court-martial consisting of a military judge alone.” Art. 19(b), UCMJ. The amount of forfei- ture of pay is still limited to two-thirds pay per month. See Art. 19(a), UCMJ.

If the convening authority refers the charges to a special court-martial, but does not specify that the special court-martial will consist of a military judge alone, the accused may elect whether to be tried by the military judge alone or by a court-martial consisting of a military judge and exactly four members. See Art. 16(c)(1) & (2)(B), UCMJ. This kind of court-martial can sentence the accused to any punishment except death, dishonorable discharge, dismissal, confinement for more than one year, hard labor without confinement for more than three months, forfeiture of pay exceeding two-thirds pay per month, or forfeiture of pay for more than one year. See Art. 19(a), UCMJ.

The following table illustrates approximate analogues among the Federal, State, and military court systems:
Comparison of Federal, State, and Military Courts

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th></th>
<th>Federal Civil &amp; Criminal</th>
<th>Typical State Civil &amp; Criminal</th>
<th>Military Criminal Only</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Appeals</td>
<td>U.S. Supreme Court</td>
<td>U.S. Supreme Court</td>
<td>U.S. Supreme Court</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Appeals</td>
<td></td>
<td>State Supreme Court</td>
<td>U.S. Court of Appeals for the Armed Forces</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Appeals</td>
<td>U.S. Circuit Courts of Appeals</td>
<td>State Appellate Courts</td>
<td>U.S. Army Court of Criminal Appeals</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>U.S. Navy-Marine Court of Criminal Appeals</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>U.S. Air Force Court of Criminal Appeals</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>U.S. Coast Guard Court of Criminal Appeals</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Trials</td>
<td>U.S. District Court</td>
<td>Court of General Jurisdiction (e.g., County Court)</td>
<td>General Court-Martial</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Trials</td>
<td>U.S. Magistrate</td>
<td>Misdemeanor Court</td>
<td>Special Court-Martial</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>Juvenile Court</td>
<td>Summary Court-Martial</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>Traffic Court</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>Probate Court</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>Family Court</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

A general court-martial, like a special court-martial, is also an adversary criminal trial conducted according to formal evidentiary and procedural rules. One major difference is that a general court-martial is typically used for more serious crimes. A general court-martial can impose any lawful sentence authorized for the offense of which the accused is convicted, including life imprisonment or even death for serious crimes.

In this case, box 14 of the Charge Sheet indicates that the Summary Court-Martial Convening Authority did not refer the charges to a summary court-martial, but instead forwarded them to Colonel (COL) Carl E. Nevin, an officer designated as the Special Court-Martial Convening Authority. Under R.C.M. 404, COL Nevin also had several choices. He could take no action and dismiss the charges. He could employ administrative corrective measures or possibly nonjudicial punishment to address the situation. He could return the charges to the Summary Court-Marital Convening Authority. He could convene a special court-martial. He could order a “preliminary hearing” for the purpose of securing more information about the best disposition of the charges. (Unless waived, a preliminary hearing is necessary before referral of charges to a general court-martial.) Finally, COL Nevin could forward the charges to the officer designated as the General Courts-Martial Convening Authority, who might be a major general or lieutenant general commanding the division at Fort Blank or the corps of which the division is a part.

The reverse side of the Charge Sheet shows that COL Nevin chose to refer the case to a special court-martial. Accordingly, there was no preliminary hearing and the case was not referred to the General Court-Martial Convening Authority.

When PFC James is tried by a special court-martial, the trial will resemble a civilian criminal trial in most respects. As The Court-Martial Process Chart indicates, under R.C.M. 901-1011, there will be an arraignment, and unless he pleads guilty, a trial on the merits in which rules of evidence are used, followed by a finding of guilty or not guilty. If he is found guilty, each side will produce evidence relevant to sentencing, and a decision on the sentence will follow. PFC James can request a trial either by a judge or a panel. The panel, however, is not exactly like a civilian jury. Its members will consist of officers or enlisted members chosen by the convening authority to hear the case. Because PFC James is enlisted, he may request that the membership of the court-martial “be comprised entirely of officers or of at least one-third enlisted members.” R.C.M. 503(a)(2). And unlike a civilian jury, the panel’s finding does not have to be unanimous. It could find him guilty by a three-fourths vote.

The MJA 2016 made three changes to the rules discussed above. The first change concerns the membership of panels. The previous default rule was that the panel will consist only of officers unless the accused is enlisted and requests that the panel have at least one-third enlisted members. Under the MJA 2016, if the accused is enlisted, the convening authority can refer a case to a panel of officers or a panel that includes both officers and enlisted members. If the accused wants a different composition, the accused may request either a panel consisting entirely of officers or a panel with at least one-third enlisted members. See Art. 25(c), UCMJ. In addition, as described above, the convening authority now has the power to refer charges to a court-martial consisting of a military judge alone, with no option for the accused to select members, but such a court-martial could not impose a punitive discharge or confinement for more than six months. See Art. 19(b), UCMJ.

The second change concerns the percentage of panel members who must vote in support of a finding or a sentence. The previous rule was two-thirds. Under the MJA 2016, votes on findings or the sentence require agreement of three-fourths of the panel members. See Art. 52(b), UCMJ. But in capital cases, the rule will remain that the death penalty may be imposed for capital offenses only if the vote to convict is unanimous and the vote on the death penalty is unanimous. The MJA 2016 does not change the rule in Article 52(c) that "[a]ll other questions to be decided by the members of a general or special court-martial shall be determined by a majority vote."

If the special court-martial finds PFC James guilty, he will have two chances for review of his conviction. First, the results of the trial will be forwarded to COL Nevin. Under R.C.M. 1106, PFC James will have the opportunity to submit documents and arguments to COL Nevin. COL Nevin will have the power to approve the findings or dismiss them, or to approve the sentence, mitigate the sentence, or disapprove the sentence. See R.C.M. 1110. He can base a decision not to approve the findings or sentence as adjudged either on grounds that errors occurred at the trial or that PFC James deserves clemency.

If PFC James is sentenced to a bad-conduct discharge, his case automatically will be reviewed by the Army Court of Criminal Appeals. See Art. 66(b)(3), UCMJ. If he is not sentenced to a bad-conduct discharge but is sentenced to more than 6 months of confinement, the Army Court of Criminal Appeals has discretion to review his case. After the Army Court of Criminal Appeals reviews his case, he may seek review by the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Armed Forces, see Art. 67(a), UCMJ and then review by the Supreme Court, Art. 67A(a), UCMJ. If he receives a lesser sentence, he may still seek review by the Judge Advocate General. See R.C.M. 1205.

Points for Discussion

1. Is the military justice system necessary or could civilian courts handle the trials of servicemembers accused of committing crimes? The answer perhaps depends on how frequently the military justice system is invoked. This figure varies over time, depending on what the military is doing and how many servicemembers are on duty. During World War II, there were 1.7 million courts-martial in the Armed Forces, the equivalent of one-third of all the civilian criminal cases tried in the United States during the War. See The Army Lawyer: A History of the Judge Advocate General’s Corps, 1775-1975 192 (1975). Most of the World War II-era courts-martial, however, were summary courts-martial, as commanders at the time could not impose punishment for minor offenses as is now permitted using Article 15, UCMJ. In recent years, with an all-volunteer force, the number of courts-martial has declined substantially. To look at just one service, in Fiscal Year 2017, there were 476,245 soldiers on active duty in the Army. Of these soldiers, 498 were tried by general courts-martial, 180 by special courts-martial, and 112 by summary courts-martial. In addition, 26,638 received nonjudicial punishment. See Uniform Code of Military Justice Committee, Annual Report for the period October 1, 2009 to September 30, 2017, http://www.armfor.U.S.Courts.gov/newcaaf/annual/FY17AnnualReport.pdf. Although the number of prosecutions has declined, what might still be some of the practical difficulties of turning all of these matters over to civilian courts?
2. Who provides legal advice to commanders and the accused as cases proceed through the military justice system? Could civilian lawyers operate as effectively as military lawyers in this role?

The following two cases are included for different reasons. The first one illustrates how cases sometimes encounter difficulties as they move through the complex path of military justice. The second case illustrates the seriousness of some of the cases that the military justice system must address.

A few words of background may help in understanding Tittel. In a typical case, the victim or other witness accuses a servicemember of an offense under the UCMJ. The accusation is forwarded to a commander who has responsibility for deciding whether to refer such a case to a court-martial for trial (i.e., for deciding whether the government should prosecute the service member for the alleged offense). This model puts the commander in charge of determining what steps are necessary for maintaining order and discipline, while also ensuring that servicemembers accused of crimes are treated fairly. The model, however, only works properly if the commander can remain neutral and detached in making the referral decision. In a case in which the accused is charged with violating an order issued by the commander, is it appropriate for the commander to decide whether to refer the case to trial? What might be an alternative manner of handling the situation? If the commander does refer the case to trial, is the error ever harmless? These are issues raised in Tittel. For more details on restrictions on the role of commanders in the court-martial process, see United States v. Nix, 40 M.J. 6 (C.M.A. 1994) [p. 228] and McKinney v. Jarvis, 46 M.J. 840 (Army Ct. Crim. 1997) [p. 301].

UNITED STATES v. TITTEL
U.S. Court of Appeals for the Armed Forces
53 M.J. 313 (C.A.A.F. 2000)

Senior Judge COX delivered opinion of the Court.

Prior to the case at hand, in June of 1996, a general court-martial convicted appellant [Specialist Third Class Todd A. Tittel, U.S. Navy] of a number of charges, one of which was shoplifting from the Navy Exchange in Sasebo, Japan. He was sentenced to be confined for 90 days and reduced to paygrade E-4. In September of 1996, appellant was processed at an administrative separation board because of his earlier court-martial conviction; the board recommended a General Discharge.

The case at hand begins in October of 1996, one day before the execution date of appellant’s discharge, when he was caught shoplifting from the Navy Exchange, Yokosuka, Japan. While being filmed by a video surveillance camera, appellant stole 44 items with the total value of about $366.33. After this incident, Captain William D. Lynch, Commanding Officer Fleet Activities, Yokosuka, Japan, ordered appellant not to enter any Navy Exchange facility. Appellant disobeyed that order by entering a Navy Exchange.
Appellant was apprehended and charged with several offenses. He was tried by a special court-martial, and pursuant to his pleas was convicted of willful disobedience of a superior officer, Captain Lynch, in violation of Article 90, Uniform Code of Military Justice, 10 U.S.C. § 890 and larceny, in violation of Article 121, UCMJ, 10 U.S.C. § 921. The court-martial sentenced appellant to be confined for 103 days, to forfeit $578 pay per month for 1 month, to be reduced to the paygrade of E–1, and to be discharged from the Navy with a bad-conduct discharge. The convening authority, also Captain Lynch, approved the sentence.

In an unpublished opinion the Court of Criminal Appeals affirmed the conviction. However, the Court reduced the sentenced confinement period from 103 days to 73 in order to comply with the pretrial agreement.

We granted review of the following issue:

 WHETHER THE NAVY–MARINE CORPS COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEALS ERRED BY AFFIRMING APPELLANT’S CONVICTION, WHERE THE CONVENING AUTHORITY WAS AN ACCUSER AND THUS COULD NOT CONVENE APPELLANT’S COURT–MARTIAL.

For the first time on appeal, appellant seeks relief. Appellant contends that where an officer’s order is willfully disobeyed, the officer is the victim of that crime. As such, the officer has a personal interest in the disposition of the offense and becomes an “accuser.” An “accuser” is disqualified from convening a special court-martial. RCM 504(c)(1), Manual for Courts–Martial, United States (1955 ed.).

Appellant’s argument is facially appealing. Convening authorities must be neutral. His rationale is that where an officer is the victim of willful disobedience, he cannot be neutral. Therefore, he cannot be the convening authority for that same case of willful disobedience.

When addressing the question, the Court of Criminal Appeals stated the following:

[T]he appellant contends that the convening authority was an accuser and prohibited from convening his court–martial. Based on the record before us, we find no evidence that Captain Lynch became personally involved with the appellant to the extent that he became an accuser. Assuming arguendo that he did become an accuser, which we do not, his failure to forward the charges to the next higher level of command for disposition was a nonjurisdictional error, which was waived by the appellant’s failure to raise it at his court-martial. RULE FOR COURTS–MARTIAL 904(e), MANUAL FOR COURTS–MARTIAL, UNITED STATES (1998 ed.); [United States v.] Shiner, 40 M.J. [155, 157 (C.M.A. 1994)]. We find no plain error. See United States v. Fisher, 21 M.J. 327, 328 (C.M.A. 1986); United States v. Powell, [49 M.J. 460 (1998)]. In light of the serious nature of the charges facing the appellant, we find it unlikely that any competent authority would not have referred this case to a special court–martial. Consequently, we find no fair risk that the appellant was prejudiced by the error. See Art. 59(a), UCMJ, 10 U.S.C. § 859(a).

Having reviewed the record, we agree with the analysis of the Court of Criminal Appeals. Accordingly, we find that the Navy-Marine Corps Court of Criminal Appeals did not err by affirming appellant’s conviction.

The decision of the United States Navy-Marine Corps Court of Criminal Appeals is affirmed.

EFFRON, Judge, with whom SULLIVAN, Judge, joins (concurring in part and in the result):

I agree with the majority opinion, except to the extent that it may be read to suggest that this case provides an appropriate vehicle for deciding whether the status of a convening authority as an accuser can be passively waived, as opposed to being the subject of a knowing and intelligent waiver. I note that the decision in this case is not based upon waiver, but rests instead upon the conclusion that the convening authority was not an accuser. The majority opinion appropriately endorses the holding of the lower court that “[b]ased on the record before us, we find no evidence that Captain Lynch became personally involved with the appellant to the extent that he became an accuser.”

A personal order does not necessarily implicate a commander’s personal interest such that he becomes an “accuser” and is disqualified as a convening authority. See United States v. Voorhees, 50 M.J. 494 (1999). The order that appellant disobeyed was a routine, administrative type of order that virtually automatically flowed from the fact of appellant’s arrest for shoplifting. No reasonable person would conclude that it represented any personal, versus official, interest of Captain Lynch or that its violation was an act that a commander would take personally. See Art. 1(9) and 23(b), UCMJ, 10 U.S.C. §§ 801(9) and 823(b), respectively; United States v. Gordon, 1 U.S.C.MA 255, 261, 2 CMR 161, 167(1952). Under these circumstances, the issue of waiver does not arise because the record does not support appellant’s contention that the convening authority had become an accuser.

Points for Discussion

1. How would you trace the path of this case on The Court-Martial Process Chart included on page 12?

2. In how many ways did the Navy respond to Tittel’s various acts of misconduct? Which officers and courts reviewed the finding of guilt and the sentence in this case?

3. Why shouldn’t the convening authority—the officer who convenes the court-martial—be a person who has an interest in any of the charges? Is it appropriate to describe Captain Lynch, the officer who convened the court-martial, as the victim of one of the crimes?
Contrary to his plea, the appellant [Stephen J. Schap, Sergeant, U.S. Army] was found guilty by a general court-martial composed of officer and enlisted members of premeditated murder in violation of Article 118, Uniform Code of Military Justice, 10 U.S.C. § 918 (1988) [hereinafter UCMJ]. Although the appellant was sentenced by the members to a dishonorable discharge, confinement for life, forfeiture of all pay and allowances, and reduction to Private E1, they recommended that the confinement be reduced as a matter of clemency. The convening authority approved only so much of the sentence as provided for a dishonorable discharge, confinement for forty-five years, forfeiture of all pay and allowances and reduction to Private E1.

The appellant contends, inter alia, that the evidence is legally and factually insufficient to support a conviction for any offense greater than voluntary manslaughter, that the military judge made numerous errors in regard to instructions to the members, and that the military judge abused his discretion in improperly limiting the testimony of a defense expert and in admitting evidence that was unduly prejudicial. We disagree and affirm.

Facts

This case involves a sordid tale of infidelity and murder by decapitation.

The appellant and his wife were married in 1989 after a six-month courtship. The appellant took his marriage seriously and wanted it to be a permanent commitment. Because his wife had suffered through three miscarriages during the marriage, the appellant obtained a vasectomy to preclude further suffering on her part.

By December 1991, the wife felt that her feelings for her husband “had pretty much died” and she decided that she could not continue with the marriage. Nevertheless, in December, 1992, she followed her husband to Fulda, Germany, where he was assigned after joining the Army in January, 1992. During 1993, she took advantage of the assignment to Germany and often traveled throughout Europe without him.

The appellant and the victim, Specialist (SPC) Glover, became friends in early 1993. On two or three occasions, SPC Glover visited the appellant and his wife in their quarters. In the summer of 1993, the appellant was required to attend a military leadership training course. While the appellant was away from home, SPC Glover went to the appellant’s quarters at least six times and had sexual intercourse with the appellant’s wife. The appellant wrote love letters to his wife while attending the course. Although by her own account she no longer loved the appellant at the time and she was having an affair with SPC Glover, she responded with equally passionate correspondence.
By October, 1993, the appellant’s wife learned that she was pregnant as a result of her sexual liaisons with SPC Glover. She did not tell the appellant about the pregnancy. She and her husband stopped having sexual relations that same month. In mid-November, 1993, she told the appellant that she no longer loved him and wanted a divorce. Over the Thanksgiving weekend, the couple talked about the details of a separation and divorce. Ultimately they agreed to a separation and her early return to the United States.

Although the appellant’s wife assured him that there was no other man in her life, the appellant was suspicious. He intercepted a letter to her postmarked 29 November 1993, that suggested that she was pregnant. On 5 December 1993, the appellant found his wife’s secret diary that indicated she may have had many other lovers during their marriage. When the appellant confronted her, she tried to explain the journal entries as fantasies or innocent relationships. On 6 December 1993, they met with a chaplain as a prelude to the pending separation, and both claimed to have been faithful during the marriage.

On 7 December 1993, the appellant went to work as normal while his wife intended to go to the bank. On the way, she experienced very heavy vaginal bleeding. Because she was afraid she was having another miscarriage, she asked an acquaintance to take her to the local German hospital. After she arrived at the hospital, she was told she would be there for at least a week. She attempted to contact SPC Glover through a legal clerk at the legal assistance office where she had worked as a volunteer. Later in the morning, when the appellant coincidentally stopped by the legal assistance office to obtain some papers in connection with the pending marital separation, that same legal clerk told the appellant that his wife was in the hospital. The appellant was concerned and went to the hospital at approximately 1420 while dressed in his battle dress uniform.

When the appellant arrived at the hospital, his wife informed him that she was pregnant because of an extramarital affair with a person she did not identify. He remained calm and appeared to be concerned about her condition. The appellant left the hospital around 1500 and returned to his quarters to retrieve items his wife had requested for her stay at the hospital. When he had not returned by 1530, she called the quarters twice, but received no answer.

The appellant arrived back at the hospital at approximately 1610 wearing jeans and a jeans jacket. He appeared agitated and questioned his wife about the identity of her lover and the circumstances of the relationship. She told him that the child was conceived while she made love on a quilt in the appellant’s living room. The appellant and his wife agreed that the lover should come to the hospital where she was undergoing treatment for the possible miscarriage. She also informed him that she had made arrangements for a message to be delivered to her lover so he could come to her side. While the appellant was in the room with her, she called the legal clerk to see if the message had been delivered. Although the appellant did not learn of SPC Glover’s identity at that time, he learned that the lover held the rank of specialist.
Approximately ten minutes later, the appellant called the legal clerk and asked, “did you deliver the message to the specialist?” The legal clerk said he was going to do so, but did not reveal the identity of the intended recipient. He then asked the appellant if he knew where a particular barracks was located.

The appellant immediately drove to the location of the barracks, approached the staff duty noncommissioned officer (NCO), and explained that he needed to find the legal clerk who was looking for a room and that he also needed to find that same room. When the staff duty NCO asked the appellant which soldier he was looking for, the appellant said, “forget it” and departed. At approximately the same time, the legal clerk found the correct room and placed a message under SPC Glover’s door. He also had SPC Glover paged to ensure that he was notified that the appellant’s wife wanted him to join her at the hospital.

The appellant, who by this time was aware that SPC Glover was the paramour, began looking for him. At some point the appellant had obtained a fighting knife with an eight-inch double-edged blade that he brought with him in his car. The appellant, acting normal, asked a soldier near the barracks dining facility if he had seen SPC Glover. The soldier informed the appellant that SPC Glover was in the telephone booth adjacent to the dining facility. The appellant replied, “[w]ell, I guess he got the message.”

Specialist Glover had answered the page and had spoken with the legal clerk. He also had retrieved the message from under his door. At approximately 1715 he called the appellant’s wife at the hospital. While SPC Glover was talking on the telephone with the appellant’s wife, the appellant approached the telephone booth. Without confronting SPC Glover or giving him any chance to explain what had happened, the appellant stabbed and slashed his intended victim in the back of the neck. Specialist Glover attempted to flee but slipped to the ground. The appellant pursued, ran past his fallen victim, turned and knelt over him and stabbed and cut him ten to twenty times in the throat, practically severing his head. A witness described some of the motions involved in the attack as if the appellant was “cutting meat or skinning a deer.” Another witness described it as “slow” and “rhythmic,” “sort of like a sawing motion.”

After stabbing the victim, the appellant stood up and kicked SPC Glover in the head several times. The head separated from the body and rolled several feet away. The onlookers were stunned at the severity of the attack and sickened with the results. One soldier, who observed the attack, vomited at the sight. The appellant, on the other hand, walked over to the head, picked it up by the hair, held it aloft and announced in a loud clear voice, “[t]his is what happens when you commit adultery.” He also stated in a sarcastic tone, “[a]nd he said he was sorry.” The appellant then turned and walked at a brisk pace to his car, carrying the head under his arm “like a football.”

A short time later the appellant was observed near his car that was stopped on a bridge over a stream. When another car approached, he quickly departed from the area. The appellant continued on his way and parked several hundred yards from the hospital. He removed his blood-stained jacket and shirt, put on an olive-colored jacket, and entered the hospital while carrying an athletic bag. He entered his wife’s small hospital room and removed SPC Glover’s head from the athletic bag. He appeared agitated and very upset. He held the head in both hands and thrust it toward his wife’s face and chest. She screamed and cowered while the appellant set the head facing his wife on an adjacent night stand. He sat down on the bed and said, “Glover’s here, he’ll sleep with you every night now, only you won’t sleep, because all you’ll see is this.”

As startled medical personnel rushed to the room, the appellant remained seated on the bed, with his legs extended over his wife’s legs, his hand on her chest trying to make her look at the head. He said to the German doctors “[g]ood, you stay here, and listen to everything that I have to say, remember as much as you can.” He also stated, “I’m her husband, and she’s an adulteress, not just with that man, . . . but many times over.” His wife described his statements as follows:

He turned to me, he said, “you know,” he said, “you gave me enough clues. It was easy enough to figure out who it was. It was easy enough to do this.”

And he told the doctors, “I’m not normally a violent man. This is my only violent act, but don’t underestimate me, I’m very skilled at what I do. I studied this, I planned this, I calculated this.” And he turned to me and he said, “I did this for you, because I love you.”

When she asked him what he did with the body and the knife the appellant replied:

I’m not that stupid . . . I don’t care if they put me in jail for the rest of my life, because I’ll just think about you. And I don’t care if they put me to sleep, if they kill me, because I’ll just think about you while they do it.

One of the German doctors testified that the appellant “behaved in a calm way” in the midst of the extraordinary situation at the hospital. The appellant asked for a bucket of water to wash his hands. He told the doctor that he “felt mistreated, humiliated, cheated on.” He took off his identification tags and threw them at the German police who arrived on the scene and said, “[t]here’s my name, I’m Stephen Schap.” He also said they should stay and listen to everything he had to say and be witnesses, but he’d go peacefully only when the military police arrived. Ultimately, the German police on the scene dragged the appellant from the room.

Shortly after he was apprehended, the appellant stated that his wife “shouldn’t have done what she’d done,” and that he “shouldn’t have done what he’d done either,” but he “realized what he did” and he would just have to “pay for it.” He was described by one witness as being “mighty calm about it.” The witness testified that the appellant “didn’t appear upset at all.”

The appellant’s car was located several hundred yards from the hospital. The gas tank was full. Inside, authorities found a change of clothing, food, shaving items, closed-out bank account records, appellant’s passport, small amounts of six types of foreign currency, telephone records, diplomas, and tax records. Although prior to the incident, the appellant had received permission to travel to the Netherlands for the weekend of 11–13 December 1993, some of the items found in the car normally were stored in boxes at the appellant’s quarters.

At his court-martial the appellant, who did not testify on the merits, never contested the fact that he had brutally attacked SPC Glover and taken the severed head to the hospital. His entire defense was that he acted in the sudden heat of passion in committing the crime of voluntary manslaughter.

Assigned Errors

The appellant contends, inter alia, that the evidence at trial was legally and factually insufficient to sustain any offense other than voluntary manslaughter. Although the law recognizes that a “person may be provoked to such an extent” that “a fatal blow may be struck before self-control has returned,” there are very specific requirements for a finding of voluntary manslaughter. See Manual for Courts–Martial (1995 Edition) [hereinafter MCM], Part IV, para. 44c(1)(a); see also United States v. Maxie, 25 C.M.R. 418 (C.M.A. 1958). . . .

In order for an unlawful killing to be reduced from murder to voluntary manslaughter the homicide must be committed in the “heat of sudden passion” which is “caused by adequate provocation.” MCM, Part IV, para. 44c(1)(a). For the provocation to be “adequate,” however, the provocation must be of a nature to “excite uncontrollable passion in a reasonable person, and the act of killing must be committed under and because of the passion.” Id. Although the “passion may result from fear or rage,” the provocation cannot be “sought or induced” by the killer. Id. Furthermore, “[i]f, judged by the standard of a reasonable person, sufficient cooling time elapses between the provocation and the killing, the offense is murder, even if the accused’s passion persists.” Id.

The test for legal sufficiency is whether, considering the evidence in the light most favorable to the prosecution, a reasonable fact finder could have found all the essential elements of the offense beyond a reasonable doubt. Jackson v. Virginia, 443 U.S. 307 (1979); accord United States v. Turner, 25 M.J. 324 (C.M.A. 1987). We are satisfied that the evidence of record more than meets this standard as to premeditated murder.

The test for factual sufficiency is whether, after weighing the evidence in the record of trial and making allowances for not having personally observed the witnesses, we are convinced of the appellant’s guilt beyond a reasonable doubt. Turner, 25 M.J. at 325. In applying this test, we make the following findings.

First, we find that upon his wife’s verification of his suspicions that she was unfaithful, the appellant set about to identify and track down the paramour. This was to be accomplished through his questioning of his wife, his contact with the legal clerk who was to deliver the message to the paramour, and his questions to the staff duty NCO.

Next, and most importantly, we find that the appellant intended to murder his wife’s paramour, regardless of who it was. He planned to accomplish this objective by using the large fighting knife he brought along for that very purpose. We reject the suggestion that the appellant only intended to confront the paramour and brought along the knife in case matters became unmanageable.

We also find that the nature and severity of the attack, coupled with the appellant’s vigorously kicking SPC Glover’s head, led to the head being severed from the body. Once the head was severed the appellant picked it up and made his coldly calculated comment about the deadly price of adultery.

We further find that the appellant carefully prepared for his escape and intended to flee from the scene of the crime. Once he held the severed head aloft, however, he realized that his identity would become known. Consequently, he determined to inflict the maximum emotional suffering upon his wife before he was apprehended. All of his conduct prior to the attack, along with his comments at the scene, at the hospital to his wife and the doctors, and to the police, convinces us that the murder was a premeditated act rather than a crime committed in the heat of passion.

In order to prevail on his contention that his crime was voluntary manslaughter, we would have to be persuaded that the evidence presented by the government was insufficient to prove premeditated murder or unpromeditated murder. We find, however, that the murder was consummated in a cold and calculating manner. We further find that the appellant had not lost self-control at the time he killed SPC Glover. We specifically reject the defense contention that the learning of the paramour’s identity triggered an uncontrollable rage. The evidence shows that the intent to kill was present before the identity of the paramour was known.

We also specifically find the appellant did not kill SPC Glover while under the influence of uncontrolled passion and because of that passion. Our conclusion is that once the appellant learned of the lover’s identity, he specifically intended to kill SPC Glover, that he contemplated and planned SPC Glover’s murder, and that he had adequate “cooling off” time to reflect upon the consequences before he acted.

We have carefully evaluated the entire record of trial, and conclude, applying our fact-finding powers of Article 66, UCMJ, that the appellant methodically planned the murder. In short, this was a premeditated murder in violation of Article 118(1), UCMJ, rather than voluntary manslaughter under Article 119, UCMJ.

The appellant has assigned three errors in regard to instructions or lack thereof from the military judge. In this case the military judge gave the standard instructions for premeditated murder, unpromeditated murder, and voluntary manslaughter. See Dep’t of the Army, Pam. 27–9, Military Judges’ Benchbook, para 3–86; 3–87. At various points in the instructions he correctly discussed heat of passion. At no time did the defense object to or request additional instructions. The trial defense counsel’s failure to object to an instruction or omission of an instruction constitutes waiver of the objection in the absence of plain error. Rule for Courts–Martial 920(f). See United States v. Morgan,
We are satisfied that the instructional errors, if any, did not rise to the level of plain error. The instructions, when taken as a whole, were appropriate and complete. We hold that the assignments of error concerning the military judge’s instructions or lack of instructions are without merit.

* * *

The appellant next contends that the military judge abused his discretion in limiting the testimony of the defense expert about rage and premeditation. The military judge permitted the defense expert to testify over government objection. The expert’s testimony was directed at states of mind in general. The military judge permitted the witness to testify about how long an individual could remain in a state of rage. He also correctly allowed the expert to discuss a person’s ability to reflect on their actions. The military judge properly limited the expert discussion to prevent confusion between the concept of reflection and the legal standard of premeditation. Thus, the assigned error is without merit.

The appellant also contends that the military judge abused his discretion in refusing to allow the defense psychiatrist to testify that at the time of the offense the appellant was in a rage. To the contrary, the military judge allowed the expert to testify about these matters. He properly would not allow the expert to bring before the members those comments made by the appellant during his clinical interviews. The expert was allowed to testify about the basis of his conclusions, but he was not allowed to place the appellant’s version of events before the members without the benefit of cross-examination of the appellant himself. The assigned error is without merit.

The appellant further contends that the military judge abused his discretion in admitting several books and catalogs concerning knives into evidence. Apparently government investigators searched through the appellant’s bookshelves in an effort to find any link to the use of knives as weapons. This issue was fully litigated at an Article 39(a), UCMJ, session prior to trial on the merits. Government counsel offered the books on the theory that they provided corroboration of the appellant’s admissions or confession. See Military Rule of Evidence. 304(g). The trial defense counsel contended that the books would be taken out of context and would prove to be more prejudicial than probative. In his view, it would not be unusual or probative of anything to find that a soldier in the United States Army possessed books or catalogs that had pictures or articles about knives and self-defense. The military judge made specific findings that the items were probative and that no unfair prejudice would result to the appellant if the books were admitted into evidence. In addition, he offered the trial defense counsel the opportunity to put the books into their proper context by use of testimony and photographs. The defense presented evidence, and directed its cross-examination to highlight that the appellant merely possessed the books and that the government presented no proof that he relied upon them in executing his alleged crime.
We are satisfied that the military judge did not abuse his discretion regarding this issue. In addition, even if the military judge erred in allowing the materials into evidence, we hold that the appellant suffered no unfair prejudice, as we are confident that the members gave the books little weight. The members certainly recognized that many soldiers, including the appellant, possess books and catalogs that featured military equipment, including knives. We also are confident that the members recognized that many soldiers were likely to have materials about knives and guns in their personal libraries.

This murder case is unusual only in regard to the decapitation and display of the head. There was little if any dispute as to the acts involved. Our review of the record convinces us that the government carried the burden to prove premeditated murder beyond a reasonable doubt. Our review also convinces us that the alleged errors are without merit.

The findings of guilty and the sentence are affirmed.

Senior Judge GRAVELLE and Judge ECKER concur.

Points for Discussion

1. Are the military courts capable of handling crimes of this magnitude? Should the military courts have jurisdiction over cases that have little to do with military discipline? Would the outcome of the case likely have been the same or different if the case had been tried in a civilian court?

2. Pursuant to a “Status of Forces Agreement” with Germany, most crimes by U.S. servicemembers in Germany are tried by courts-martial rather than German courts. Why might both Germany and the United States favor this arrangement?

1-3. Jurisdiction Over Military Persons and Offenses

Nearly everyone tried by court-martial is a servicemember accused of committing a crime while on active duty. This includes both regular servicemembers (i.e., those who are always on active duty) and reservists and national guardsmen who have been mobilized or placed on active duty for training. Article 2(a)(1), UCMJ, 10 U.S.C. § 802(a)(1), unambiguously gives courts-martial jurisdiction over these servicemembers by saying: “The following persons are subject to this chapter . . . [m]embers of a regular component of the armed force . . . and other persons lawfully called or ordered into, or to duty in or for training in, the armed forces, from the dates when they are required by the terms of the call or order to obey it.”

This observation raises two questions. The first is whether a court-martial has jurisdiction to try anyone other than a servicemember on active duty. The second is whether the offense for which a person is tried by court-martial must be connected to the person's service. These questions are considered in turn.

Persons Subject to Court-Martial

Although most of the accused who are tried by court-martial are service-members on active duty, Article 2(a)(2)-(13), UCMJ, 10 U.S.C. § 802(a)(2)-(13), reprinted in the margin, lists twelve additional categories of persons subject to trial by court-martial. Some of these additional categories are well-accepted. For example, it is perhaps not surprising that Military Academy cadets and Naval Academy midshipmen are subject to court-martial jurisdiction,

* 10 U.S.C. § 802. Art. 2. Persons subject to this chapter

(a) The following persons are subject to this chapter:

(1) Members of a regular component of the armed forces, including those awaiting discharge after expiration of their terms of enlistment; volunteers from the time of their muster or acceptance into the armed forces; inductees from the time of their actual induction into the armed forces; and other persons lawfully called or ordered into, or to duty in or for training in, the armed forces, from the dates when they are required by the terms of the call or order to obey it.

(2) Cadets, aviation cadets, and midshipmen.

(3) Members of a reserve component while on inactive-duty training, but in the case of members of the Army National Guard of the United States or the Air National Guard of the United States only when in Federal service.

(4) Retired members of a regular component of the armed forces who are entitled to pay.

(5) Retired members of a reserve component who are receiving hospitalization from an armed force.

(6) Members of the Fleet Reserve and Fleet Marine Corps Reserve.

(7) Persons in custody of the armed forces serving a sentence imposed by a court-martial.

(8) Members of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, Public Health Service, and other organizations, when assigned to and serving with the armed forces.

(9) Prisoners of war in custody of the armed forces.

(10) In time of declared war or a contingency operation, persons serving with or accompanying an armed force in the field.

(11) Subject to any treaty or agreement to which the United States is or may be a party or to any accepted rule of international law, persons serving with, employed by, or accompanying the armed forces outside the United States and outside the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, Guam, and the Virgin Islands.

(12) Subject to any treaty or agreement to which the United States is or may be a party or to any accepted rule of international law, persons within an area leased by or otherwise reserved or acquired for the use of the United States which is under the control of the Secretary concerned and which is outside the United States and outside the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, Guam, and the Virgin Islands.

(13) Individuals belonging to one of the eight categories enumerated in Article 4 of the Convention Relative to the Treatment of Prisoners of War, done at Geneva August 12, 1949 (6 UST 3316), who violate the law of war.
under Article 2(a)(2), UCMJ, 10 U.S.C. § 802(a)(2), because they live according to very strict military discipline. But other categories are more controversial. Few military retirees who are receiving retired pay probably realize that retirees can be and occasionally are tried by court-martial. Indeed, in recent years a retired Army major general was convicted of a fraternization-type offense, see Robert Burns, Retired General Demoted, Wash. Post, Sept. 3, 1999, at A25, and a retired Army master sergeant was sentenced to death for committing three murders, see Hennis v. Hemlick, 2012 WL 120054 (4th Cir. 2012). Similarly, during the United States’ military engagements in Iraq and Afghanistan, the United States has relied on private companies (typically called “contractors”) to carry out tasks such as driving trucks, running dining facilities, translating foreign languages, and so forth. The employees for these contractors are all subject to trial by court-martial because they are, in the words of Article 2(a)(11), UCMJ, 10 U.S.C. § 802(a)(11), “[i]n time of declared war or a contingency operation, persons serving with or accompanying an armed force in the field.” In reality, however, only a few have faced a court-martial to date.

The Supreme Court held in United States ex rel. Toth v. Quarles, 350 U.S. 11 (1955), that a court-martial cannot exercise jurisdiction over a former soldier for a crime committed while on active duty. In Reid v. Covert, 354 U.S. 1 (1957), the landmark case that follows, the Supreme Court concluded that a court-martial could not exercise court-martial jurisdiction over civilian family members accompanying servicemembers overseas during peacetime. In reading the decision, note that it lacks a majority opinion: Justice Black wrote a plurality opinion for four justices and Justice Frankfurter and Justice Harlan wrote separate concurrences in the judgment, while Justice Clark wrote a dissent which Justice Burton joined. Justice Whitaker did not participate. Thus, there were seven Justices on one side, and two on the other, but no opinion received five votes.

REID v. COVERT
U.S. Supreme Court
354 U.S. 1 (1957)

Mr. Justice BLACK announced the judgment of the Court and delivered an opinion, in which The CHIEF JUSTICE, Mr. Justice DOUGLAS, and Mr. Justice BRENNAN join.

These cases raise basic constitutional issues of the utmost concern. They call into question the role of the military under our system of government. They involve the power of Congress to expose civilians to trial by military tribunals, under military regulations and procedures, for offenses against the United States thereby depriving them of trial in civilian courts, under civilian laws and procedures and with all the safeguards of the Bill of Rights. These cases are particularly significant because for the first time since the adoption of the Constitution wives of soldiers have been denied trial by jury in a court of law and forced to trial before courts-martial.
In No. 701 Mrs. Clarice Covert killed her husband, a sergeant in the United States Air Force, at an airbase in England. Mrs. Covert, who was not a member of the armed services, was residing on the base with her husband at the time. She was tried by a court-martial for murder under Article 118 of the Uniform Code of Military Justice (UCMJ). The trial was on charges preferred by Air Force personnel and the court-martial was composed of Air Force officers. The court-martial asserted jurisdiction over Mrs. Covert under Article 2(11) of the UCMJ, which provides:

The following persons are subject to this code:

(11) Subject to the provisions of any treaty or agreement to which the United States is or may be a party or to any accepted rule of international law, all persons serving with, employed by, or accompanying the armed forces without the continental limits of the United States ***.

Counsel for Mrs. Covert contended that she was insane at the time she killed her husband, but the military tribunal found her guilty of murder and sentenced her to life imprisonment. The judgment was affirmed by the Air Force Board of Review, but was reversed by the Court of Military Appeals, because of prejudicial errors concerning the defense of insanity. While Mrs. Covert was being held in this country pending a proposed retrial by court-martial in the District of Columbia, her counsel petitioned the District Court for a writ of habeas corpus to set her free on the ground that the Constitution forbade her trial by military authorities. Construing this Court’s decision in United States ex rel. Toth v. Quarles, 350 U.S. 11 (1955) as holding that ‘a civilian is entitled to a civilian trial’ the District Court held that Mrs. Covert could not be tried by courtmartial and ordered her released from custody. The Government appealed directly to this Court under 28 U.S.C. § 1252.

In No. 713 Mrs. Dorothy Smith killed her husband, an Army officer, at a post in Japan where she was living with him. She was tried for murder by a court-martial and despite considerable evidence that she was insane was found guilty and sentenced to life imprisonment. The judgment was approved by the Army Board of Review, and the Court of Military Appeals. Mrs. Smith was then confined in a federal penitentiary in West Virginia. Her father, respondent here, filed a petition for habeas corpus in a District Court for West Virginia. The petition charged that the court-martial was without jurisdiction because Article 2(11) of the UCMJ was unconstitutional insofar as it authorized the trial of civilian dependents accompanying servicemen overseas. The District Court refused to issue the writ, and while an appeal was pending in the Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit, we granted certiorari at the request of the Government.

The two cases were consolidated and argued last Term and a majority of the Court, with three Justices dissenting and one reserving opinion, held that military trial of Mrs. Smith and Mrs. Covert for their alleged offenses was constitutional. 351 U.S. 470 (1956). The majority held that the provisions of Article III and the Fifth and Sixth Amendments which require that crimes be tried by a jury after indictment by a grand jury did not protect an American citizen when he was tried by the American Government in foreign lands for offenses committed there and that Congress could provide for the trial of such offenses in any manner it saw fit so long as the procedures established were reasonable and consonant with due process. The opinion then went on to express the view that military trials, as now practiced, were not unreasonable or arbitrary when applied to dependents accompanying members of the armed forces overseas. In reaching their conclusion the majority found it unnecessary to consider the power of Congress “To make Rules for the Government and Regulation of the land and naval Forces” under Article I, § 8, cl. 14 of the Constitution.

Subsequently, the Court granted a petition for rehearing. Now, after further argument and consideration, we conclude that the previous decisions cannot be permitted to stand. We hold that Mrs. Smith and Mrs. Covert could not constitutionally be tried by military authorities.

I.

At the beginning we reject the idea that when the United States acts against citizens abroad it can do so free of the Bill of Rights. The United States is entirely a creature of the Constitution. Its power and authority have no other source. It can only act in accordance with all the limitations imposed by the Constitution. When the Government reaches out to punish a citizen who is abroad, the shield which the Bill of Rights and other parts of the Constitution provide to protect his life and liberty should not be stripped away just because he happens to be in another land. . . .

The rights and liberties which citizens of our country enjoy are not protected by custom and tradition alone, they have been jealously preserved from the encroachments of Government by express provisions of our written Constitution.

Among those provisions, Art. III, § 2 and the Fifth and Sixth Amendments are directly relevant to these cases. Article III, § 2 lays down the rule that:

The Trial of all Crimes, except in Cases of Impeachment, shall be by Jury; and such Trial shall be held in the State where the said Crimes shall have been committed; but when not committed within any State, the Trial shall be at such Place or Places as the Congress may by Law have directed.

The Fifth Amendment declares:

No person shall be held to answer for a capital, or otherwise infamous crime, unless on a presentment or indictment of a Grand Jury, except in cases arising in the land or naval forces, or in the Militia, when in actual service in time of War or public danger; * * *.

And the Sixth Amendment provides:

In all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial, by an impartial jury of the State and district wherein the crime shall have been committed * * *.
The language of Art. III, § 2 manifests that constitutional protections for the individual were designed to restrict the United States Government when it acts outside of this country, as well as here at home. After declaring that all criminal trials must be by jury, the section states that when a crime is “not committed within any State, the Trial shall be at such Place or Places as the Congress may by Law have directed.” If this language is permitted to have its obvious meaning, § 2 is applicable to criminal trials outside of the States as a group without regard to where the offense is committed or the trial held. From the very first Congress, federal statutes have implemented the provisions of § 2 by providing for trial of murder and other crimes committed outside the jurisdiction of any State “in the district where the offender is apprehended, or into which he may first be brought.” The Fifth and Sixth Amendments, like Art. III, § 2, are also all inclusive with their sweeping references to “no person” and to “all criminal prosecutions.”

II.

At the time of Mrs. Covert’s alleged offense, an executive agreement was in effect between the United States and Great Britain which permitted United States’ military courts to exercise exclusive jurisdiction over offenses committed in Great Britain by American servicemen or their dependents. For its part, the United States agreed that these military courts would be willing and able to try and to punish all offenses against the laws of Great Britain by such persons. In all material respects, the same situation existed in Japan when Mrs. Smith killed her husband. Even though a court-martial does not give an accused trial by jury and other Bill of Rights protections, the Government contends that article 2(11) of UCMJ, insofar as it provides for the military trial of dependents accompanying the armed forces in Great Britain and Japan, can be sustained as legislation which is necessary and proper to carry out the United States’ obligations under the international agreements made with those countries. The obvious and decisive answer to this, of course, is that no agreement with a foreign nation can confer power on the Congress, or on any other branch of Government, which is free from the restraints of the Constitution.

III.

Article I, § 8, cl. 14, empowers Congress “To make Rules for the Government and Regulation of the land and naval Forces.” It has been held that this creates an exception to the normal method of trial in civilian courts as provided by the Constitution and permits Congress to authorize military trial of members of the armed services without all the safeguards given an accused by Article III and the Bill of Rights. But if the language of Clause 14 is given its natural meaning, the power granted does not extend to civilians—even though they may be dependents living with servicemen on a military base. The term “land and naval Forces” refers to persons who are members of the armed services and not to their civilian wives, children and other dependents. It seems inconceivable that Mrs. Covert or Mrs. Smith could have been tried by military authorities as members of the “land and naval Forces” had they been living on a military post in this country. Yet this constitutional term surely has the same meaning everywhere. The wives of servicemen are no more members of the “land and naval Forces” when living at a military post in England or Japan than when living at a base in this country or in Hawaii or Alaska.

* * *

The tradition of keeping the military subordinate to civilian authority may not be so strong in the minds of this generation as it was in the minds of those who wrote the Constitution. The idea that the relatives of soldiers could be denied a jury trial in a court of law and instead be tried by court-martial under the guise of regulating the armed forces would have seemed incredible to those men, in whose lifetime the right of the military to try soldiers for any offenses in time of peace had only been grudgingly conceded. The Founders envisioned the army as a necessary institution, but one dangerous to liberty if not confined within its essential bounds. Their fears were rooted in history. They knew that ancient republics had been overthrown by their military leaders. They were familiar with the history of Seventeenth Century England, where Charles I tried to govern through the army and without Parliament. During this attempt, contrary to the Common Law, he used courts-martial to try soldiers for certain non-military offenses. This court-martialing of soldiers in peacetime evoked strong protests from Parliament.

* * *

The generation that adopted the Constitution did not distrust the military because of past history alone. Within their own lives they had seen royal governors sometimes resort to military rule. British troops were quartered in Boston at various times from 1768 until the outbreak of the Revolutionary War to support unpopular royal governors and to intimidate the local populace. The trial of soldiers by courts-martial and the interference of the military with the civil courts aroused great anxiety and antagonism not only in Massachusetts but throughout the colonies.

In light of this history, it seems clear that the Founders had no intention to permit the trial of civilians in military courts, where they would be denied jury trials and other constitutional protections, merely by giving Congress the power to make rules which were “necessary and proper” for the regulation of the “land and naval Forces.” Such a latitudinarian interpretation of these clauses would be at war with the well-established purpose of the Founders to keep the military strictly within its proper sphere, subordinate to civil authority. The Constitution does not say that Congress can regulate “the land and naval Forces and all other persons whose regulation might have some relationship to maintenance of the land and naval Forces.” There is no indication that the Founders contemplated setting up a rival system of military courts to compete with civilian courts for jurisdiction over civilians who might have some contact or relationship with the armed forces. Courts-martial were not to have concurrent jurisdiction with courts of law over non-military America.

In No. 701, Reid v. Covert, the judgment of the District Court directing the Mrs. Covert be released from custody is affirmed.

In No. 713, Kinsella v. Krueger, the judgment of the District Court is reversed and the case is remanded with instructions to order Mrs. Smith released from custody.

Mr. Justice WHITTAKER took no part in the consideration or decision of these cases.

Mr. Justice FRANKFURTER,* concurring in the result.

* * *

Trial by court-martial is constitutionally permissible only for persons who can, on a fair appraisal, be regarded as falling within the authority given to Congress under Article I to regulate the “land and naval Forces,” and who therefore are not protected by specific provisions of Article III and the Fifth and Sixth Amendments. . . .

* * *

The prosecution by court-martial for capital crimes committed by civilian dependents of members of the armed forces abroad is hardly to be deemed, under modern conditions, obviously appropriate to the effective exercise of the power to “make Rules for the Government and Regulation of the land and naval Forces” when it is a question of deciding what power is granted under Article I and therefore what restriction is made on Article III and the Fifth and Sixth Amendments. I do not think that the proximity, physical and social, of these women to the ‘land and naval Forces’ is, with due regard to all that has been put before us, so clearly demanded by the effective “Government and Regulation” of those forces as reasonably to demonstrate a justification for court-martial jurisdiction over capital offenses.

* Justice Felix Frankfurter was a major in the U.S. Army Reserve, Judge Advocate General’s Corps, while serving on the U.S. Supreme Court. By his own admission, he avoided wearing his uniform whenever possible. He explained: “The reason I didn’t want to go into uniform was because I knew enough about the doings in the War Department to know that every pipsqueak Colonel would feel that he was more important than a Major . . . . As a civilian I could get into the presence of a General without saluting, clicking my heels, and having the Colonel outside say, ‘You wait. He’s got a Colonel in there.’ ” The Army Lawyer: A History of the Judge Advocate General’s Corps, 1775-1975 118 (1975).—Eds.
The Government speaks of the “great potential impact on military discipline” of these accompanying civilian dependents. This cannot be denied, nor should its implications be minimized. But the notion that discipline over military personnel is to be furthered by subjecting their civilian dependents to the threat of capital punishment imposed by court-martial is too hostile to the reasons that underlie the procedural safeguards of the Bill of Rights for those safeguards to be displaced. It is true that military discipline might be affected seriously if civilian dependents could commit murders and other capital crimes with impunity. No one, however, challenges the availability to Congress of a power to provide for trial and punishment of these dependents for such crimes. The method of trial alone is in issue. . . .

* * *

I therefore conclude that, in capital cases, the exercise of court-martial jurisdiction over civilian dependents in time of peace cannot be justified by Article I, considered in connection with the specific protections of Article III and the Fifth and Sixth Amendments.

* * *

Mr. Justice HARLAN, concurring in the result.

I concur in the result, on the narrow ground that where the offense is capital, Article 2(11) cannot constitutionally be applied to the trial of civilian dependents of members of the armed forces over-seas in times of peace.

* * *

For analytical purposes, I think it useful to break down the issue before us into two questions: First, is there a rational connection between the trial of these army wives by court-martial and the power of Congress to make rules for the governance of the land and naval forces; in other words, is there any initial power here at all? Second, if there is such a rational connection, to what extent does this statute, though reasonably calculated to subserve an enumerated power, collide with other express limitations on congressional power; in other words, can this statute, however appropriate to the Article I power looked at in isolation, survive against the requirements of Article III and the Fifth and Sixth Amendments? I recognize that these two questions are ultimately one and the same, since the scope of the Article I power is not separable from the limitations imposed by Article III and the Fifth and Sixth Amendments. Nevertheless I think it will make for clarity of analysis to consider them separately.

* * *

. . . I cannot say that the court-martial jurisdiction here involved has no rational connection with the stated power. The Government, it seems to me, has made a strong showing that the court-martial of civilian dependents abroad has a close connection to the proper and effective functioning of our overseas military contingents. There is no need to detail here the various aspects of this connection, which have been well dealt with in the dissenting opinion of my brother CLARK. Suffice it to say that to all intents and purposes these civilian dependents are part of the military community overseas, are so regarded by the host country, and must be subjected to the same discipline if the military commander is to have the power to prevent activities which would jeopardize the security and effectiveness of his command.

It seems to me clear on such a basis that these dependents, when sent overseas by the Government, become pro tanto a part of the military community. I cannot say, therefore, that it is irrational or arbitrary for Congress to subject them to military discipline. I do not deal now, of course, with the problem of alternatives to court-martial jurisdiction; all that needs to be established at this stage is that, viewing Art. I, § 8, cl. 14 in isolation, subjection of civilian dependents overseas to court-martial jurisdiction can in no wise be deemed unrelated to the power of Congress to make all necessary and proper laws to insure the effective governance of our overseas land and naval forces.

I turn now to the other side of the coin. For no matter how practical and how reasonable this jurisdiction might be, it still cannot be sustained if the Constitution guarantees to these army wives a trial in an Article III court, with indictment by grand jury and jury trial as provided by the Fifth and Sixth Amendments.

* * *

. . . I cannot agree with the sweeping proposition that a full Article III trial, with indictment and trial by jury, is required in every case for the trial of a civilian dependent of a serviceman overseas. The Government, it seems to me, has made an impressive showing that at least for the run-of-the-mill offenses committed by dependents overseas, such a requirement would be as impractical and anomalous as it would have been to require jury trial for Balzac in Porto Rico. Again, I need not go into details, beyond stating that except for capital offenses, such as we have here, to which, in my opinion, special considerations apply, I am by no means ready to say that Congress’ power to provide for trial by court-martial of civilian dependents overseas is limited by Article III and the Fifth and Sixth Amendments. Where, if at all, the dividing line should be drawn among cases not capital, need not now be decided. We are confronted here with capital offenses alone; and it seems to me particularly unwise now to decide more than we have to. Our far-flung foreign military establishments are a new phenomenon in our national life, and I think it would be unfortunate were we unnecessarily to foreclose, as my four brothers would do, our future consideration of the broad questions involved in maintaining the effectiveness of these national outposts, in the light of continuing experience with these problems.

So far as capital cases are concerned, I think they stand on quite a different footing than other offenses. In such cases the law is especially sensitive to demands for that procedural fairness which inheres in a civilian trial where the judge and trier of fact are not responsive to the command of the convening authority. I do not concede that whatever process is “due” an offender faced with a fine or a prison sentence necessarily satisfies the requirements of the Constitution in a capital case. . . . In fact, the Government itself has conceded that one grave offense, treason, presents a special case: ‘The gravity of this offense is such that we can well assume that, whatever difficulties may be involved in trial far from the scene of the offense... the trial should be in our courts.’ I see no reason for not applying the same principle to any case where a civilian dependent stands trial on pain of life itself. The number of such cases would appear to be so negligible that the practical problems of affording the defendant a civilian trial would not present insuperable problems.

On this narrow ground I concur in the result in these cases.

Mr. Justice CLARK, with whom Mr. Justice BURTON joins, dissenting.

The Court today releases two women from prosecution though the evidence shows that they brutally killed their husbands, both American soldiers, while stationed with them in quarters furnished by our armed forces on its military installations in foreign lands.

Mr. Justice BURTON and I remain convinced that the former opinions of the Court are correct and that they set forth valid constitutional doctrine under the long-recognized cases of this Court. The opinions were neither written nor agreed to in haste and they reflect the consensus of the majority reached after thorough discussion at many conferences. In fact, the cases were here longer both before and after argument than many of the cases we decide. We adhere to the views there expressed since we are convinced that through them we were neither “mortgaging the future,” as is claimed, nor foreclosing the present, as does the judgment today. We do not include a discussion of the theory upon which those former judgments were entered because we are satisfied with its handling in the earlier opinions.

Points for Discussion

1. How did the plurality opinion and the two concurrences in judgment differ from each other?

2. Does Reid v. Covert prevent a court-martial from trying a civilian accompanying the force in the field, such as a cafeteria worker or truck mechanic who commits murder?

3. Clarice Covert killed her husband, a master sergeant in the Air Force, by striking him with an ax as he lay sleeping. Dorothy Smith, who happened to be the daughter of an Army General, killed her husband, an Army Colonel, by stabbing him with a knife while he slept. Both wives appeared to have psychiatric problems and the murders had nothing directly to do with their husband’s military service. Imagine, however, that the facts were different and that the wives had committed crimes such as espionage on the military or murder for the purpose of sabotaging a military mission. Could a court-martial try them in such circumstances? For the fascinating telling of complete story of the case, see Brittany Warren, The Case of the Murdering Wives: Reid v. Covert and the Complicated Question of Civilians and Courts-Martial, 212 Mil. L. Rev. 133 (2012).
4. This case is said to be the only case in which the Supreme Court overruled its previous judgment on rehearing. It was successfully litigated by Frederick Bernays Wiener, a retired Army judge advocate and distinguished legal scholar at The George Washington University, who gained considerable renown for this accomplishment.

In Reid v. Covert, the plurality opinion observes that people of England were outraged that Charles I had used courts-martial to try soldiers for non-military offenses during peacetime. This practice, however, occurs constantly in the United States. The military prosecutes soldiers for crimes that have no military connection and that take place not on any military premises. For example, if a soldier left the garrison, went into town in civilian clothes and used illegal drugs in a private home, he could be tried by a court-martial. Is this constitutional? In O’Callahan v. Parker, 395 U.S. 258 (1969), an active duty Army sergeant was charged with breaking into a hotel room in Honolulu, assaulting a young civilian girl, and attempting to rape her. The Supreme Court held that a court-martial could not exercise jurisdiction over these charges. The Court reasoned:

The fact that courts-martial have no jurisdiction over nonsoldiers, whatever their offense, does not necessarily imply that they have unlimited jurisdiction over soldiers, regardless of the nature of the offenses charged. Nor do the cases of this Court suggest any such interpretation. * * * “Status” is necessary for jurisdiction; but it does not follow that ascertainment of “status” completes the inquiry, regardless of the nature, time, and place of the offense.

Both in England prior to the American Revolution and in our own national history military trial of soldiers committing civilian offenses has been viewed with suspicion. Abuses of the court-martial power were an important grievance of the parliamentary forces in the English constitutional crises of the 17th century. The resolution of that conflict came with the acceptance by William and Mary of the Bill of Rights in 1689 which established that in the future, Parliament, not the Crown, would have the power to define the jurisdiction of courts-martial. 1 W. & M., Sess. 2, c. 2. The 17th century conflict over the proper role of courts-martial in the enforcement of the domestic criminal law was not, however, merely a dispute over what organ of government had jurisdiction. It also involved substantive disapproval of the general use of military courts for trial of ordinary crimes.

Parliament, possessed at last of final power in the matter, was quick to authorize, subject to annual renewal, maintenance of a standing army and to give authority for trial by court-martial of certain crimes closely related to military discipline. But Parliament’s new power over courts-martial was exercised only very sparingly to ordain military jurisdiction over acts which were also offenses at common law. The first of the annual mutiny acts, 1 W. & M., c. 5, set the tone. It established the general rule that “noe Man may be forejudged of Life or Limbe, or subjected to any kinde of punishment by Martill Law or in any other manner than by the Judgment of his Peerers and according to the knowne and Established Laws of this Realme.”

And it proceeded to grant courts-martial jurisdiction only over mutiny, sedition, and desertion. In all other respects, military personnel were to be subject other manner than by the Judgment of

The jurisdiction of British courts-martial over military offenses which were also common-law felonies was from time to time extended, but, with the exception of one year, there was never any general military jurisdiction to try soldiers for ordinary crimes committed in the British Isles. It was, therefore, the rule in Britain at the time of the American Revolution that a soldier could not be tried by court-martial for a civilian offense committed in Britain; instead military officers were required to use their energies and office to insure that the accused soldier would be tried before a civil court. Evasion and erosion of the principle that crimes committed by soldiers should be tried according to regular judicial procedure in civil, not military, courts, if any were available, were among the grievances protested by the American Colonists.

Early American practice followed the British model. The Continental Congress, in enacting articles of war in 1776, emphasized the importance of military authority cooperating to insure that soldiers who committed crimes were brought to justice. But it is clear from the context of the provision it enacted that it expected the trials would be in civil courts. The “general article,” which punished “[a]ll crimes not capital, and all disorders and neglects, which officers and soldiers may be guilty of, to the prejudice of good order and military discipline, though not mentioned in the foregoing articles of war,” was interpreted to embrace only crimes the commission of which had some direct impact on military discipline. [W. Winthrop’s Military Law and Precedents 1123 (1920) (reprint of 2d edition published 1896)]. While practice was not altogether consistent, during the 19th century court-martial convictions for ordinary civil crimes were from time to time set aside by the reviewing authority on the ground that the charges recited only a violation of the general criminal law and failed to state a military offense. Id., at 1124, nn. 82, 88.16

During the Civil War, Congress provided for military trial of certain civil offenses without regard to their effect on order and discipline, but the act applied only ‘in time of war, insurrection, or rebellion.’ Act of Mar. 3, 1863, c. 75, § 30, 12 Stat. 736; Rev. Stat. § 1342, Art. 58 (1874). In 1916, on the eve of World War I, the Articles of War were revised, 39 Stat. 650, to provide for military trial, even in peacetime, of certain specific civilian crimes committed by persons “subject to military law” and the general article, Art. 96, was modified to provide for military trial of “all crimes or offenses not capital.” In 1950, the Uniform Code of Military Justice extended military jurisdiction to capital crimes as well.
We have concluded that the crime to be under military jurisdiction must be service connected, lest “cases arising in the land or naval forces, or in the Militia, when in actual service in time of War or public danger,” as used in the Fifth Amendment, be expanded to deprive every member of the armed services of the benefits on an indictment by a grand jury and a trial by a jury of his peers. The power of Congress to make “Rules for the Government and Regulation of the land and naval Forces,” Art. I, § 8, cl. 14, need not be sparingly read in order to preserve those two important constitutional guarantees. For it is assumed that an express grant of general power to Congress is to be exercised in harmony with express guarantees of the Bill of Rights. We were advised on oral argument that Art. 134 is construed by the military to give it power to try a member of the armed services for income tax evasion. This article has been called “a catch-all” that “incorporates almost every Federal penal statute into the Uniform Code.” R. Everett, Military Justice in the Armed Forces of the United States 68-69 (1956). The catalogue of cases put within reach of the military is indeed long; and we see no way of saving to servicemen and servicewomen in any case the benefits of indictment and of trial by jury, if we conclude that this petitioner was properly tried by court-martial.

In the present case petitioner was properly absent from his military base when he committed the crimes with which he is charged. There was no connection—not even the remotest one—between his military duties and the crimes in question. The crimes were not committed on a military post or enclave; nor was the person whom he attacked performing any duties relating to the military. Moreover, Hawaii, the situs of the crime, is not an armed camp under military control, as are some of our far-flung outposts.

Finally, we deal with peacetime offenses, not with authority stemming from the war power. Civil courts were open. The offenses were committed within our territorial limits, not in the occupied zone of a foreign country. The offenses did not involve any question of the flouting of military authority, the security of a military post, or the integrity of military property.

We have accordingly decided that since petitioner’s crimes were not service connected, he could not be tried by court-martial but rather was entitled to trial by the civilian courts.

O’Callahan v. Parker, 395 U.S. at 267-275. But O’Callahan was overruled in the following case:

SOLORIO v. UNITED STATES

U.S. Supreme Court

483 U.S. 435 (1987)

Chief Justice REHNQUIST delivered the opinion of the Court.

This case presents the question whether the jurisdiction of a court-martial convened pursuant to the Uniform Code of Military Justice (U.C.M.J.) to try a member of the Armed Forces depends on the “service connection” of the of-cense charged. We hold that it does not, and overrule our earlier decision in

While petitioner Richard Solorio was on active duty in the Seventeenth

Coast Guard District in Juneau, Alaska, he sexually abused two young daughters of fellow coastguardsmen. Petitioner engaged in this abuse over a 2-year period until he was transferred by the Coast Guard to Governors Island, New York. Coast Guard authorities learned of the Alaska crimes only after petitioner’s transfer, and investigation revealed that he had later committed similar sexual abuse offenses while stationed in New York. The Governors Is-tand commander convened a general court-martial to try petitioner for crimes alleged to have occurred in Alaska and New York.

There is no “base” or “post” where Coast Guard personnel live and work in Juneau. Consequently, nearly all Coast Guard military personnel reside in the civilian community. Petitioner’s Alaska offenses were committed in his privately owned home, and the fathers of the 10- to 12-year-old victims in Alaska were active duty members of the Coast Guard assigned to the same command as petitioner. Petitioner’s New York offenses also involved daughters of fellow costguardsmen, but were committed in Government quarters on the Governors Island base.

After the general court-martial was convened in New York, petitioner moved to dismiss the charges for crimes committed in Alaska on the ground that the court lacked jurisdiction under this Court’s decisions in O’Callahan v.

(1971). Ruling that the Alaska offenses were not sufficiently “service connected” to be tried in the military criminal justice system, the court-martial judge granted the motion to dismiss. The Government appealed the dismissal of the charges to the United States Coast Guard Court of Military Review, which reversed the trial judge’s order and reinstated the charges.

The United States Court of Military Appeals affirmed the Court of Military Review, concluding that the Alaska offenses were service connected within the meaning of O’Callahan and Relford. 21 M.J. 251 (1986). Stating that “not every off-base offense against a servicemember’s dependent is service-connected,” the court reasoned that “sex offenses against young children . . . have a continuining effect on the victims and their families and ultimately on the morale of any military unit or organization to which the family member is assigned.” . . . We now affirm.

The Constitution grants to Congress the power “[t]o make Rules for the Goverment and Regulation of the land and naval Forces.” U.S. Const., Art. I, § 8, c1. 14. Exercising this authority, Congress has empowered courts-martial to try servicemen for the crimes proscribed by the U.C.M.J., Arts. 2, 17, 10 U.S.C.

§§ 802, 817. The Alaska offenses with which petitioner was charged are each described in the U.C.M.J. Thus it is not disputed that the court-martial convened in New York possessed the statutory authority to try petitioner on the Alaska child abuse specifications.

In an unbroken line of decisions from 1866 to 1960, this Court interpreted the Constitution as conditioning the proper exercise of court-martial jurisdiction over an offense on one factor: the military status of the accused. Gosa v. Mayden, 413 U.S. 665, 673 (1973) (plurality opinion); see Kinsella v. United States ex rel. Singleton, 361 U.S. 234, 240-241, 243 (1960); Reid v. Covert, 354 U.S. 1, 22-23 (1957) (plurality opinion) . . . ; cf. United States ex rel. Toth v. Quarles, 350 U.S. 11, 15 (1955) . . . . This view was premised on what the Court described as the “natural meaning” of Art. I, § 8, cl. 14, as well as the Fifth Amendment’s exception for “cases arising in the land or naval forces.” Reid v. Covert, supra, 354 U.S., at 19; United States ex rel. Toth v. Quarles, supra, 350 U.S., at 15. As explained in Kinsella v. Singleton, supra:

“The test for jurisdiction . . . is one of status, namely, whether the accused in the court-martial proceeding is a person who can be regarded as falling within the term ‘land and naval Forces.’ . . .” Id., 361 U.S., at 240-241.

“Without contradiction, the materials . . . show that military jurisdiction has always been based on the ‘status’ of the accused, rather than on the nature of the offense. To say that military jurisdiction ‘defies definition in terms of military “status”’ is to defy the unambiguous language of Art. I, § 8, cl. 14, as well as the historical background thereof and the precedents with reference thereto.” Id., at 243.

Implicit in the military status test was the principle that determinations concerning the scope of court-martial jurisdiction over offenses committed by servicemen was a matter reserved for Congress:

“[T]he rights of men in the armed forces must perforce be conditioned to meet certain overriding demands of discipline and duty, and the civil courts are not the agencies which must determine the precise balance to be struck in this adjustment. The Framers expressly entrusted that task to Congress.” Burns v. Wilson, 346 U.S. 137, 140 (1953) (plurality opinion) (footnote omitted).

In 1969, the Court in O’Callahan v. Parker departed from the military status test and announced the “new constitutional principle” that a military tribunal may not try a serviceman charged with a crime that has no service connection. See Gosa v. Mayden, supra, 361 U.S., at 673. Applying this principle, the O’Callahan Court held that a serviceman’s off-base sexual assault on a civilian with no connection with the military could not be tried by court-martial. On reexamination of O’Callahan, we have decided that the service connection test announced in that decision should be abandoned.

The constitutional grant of power to Congress to regulate the Armed Forces, Art. I, § 8, cl. 14, appears in the same section as do the provisions granting Congress authority, inter alia, to regulate commerce among the several States, to coin money, and to declare war. On its face there is no indication that the grant of power in Clause 14 was any less plenary than the grants of other authority to Congress in the same section. Whatever doubts there might be about the extent of Congress’ power under Clause 14 to make rules for the “Government and Regulation of the land and naval Forces,” that power surely embraces the authority to regulate the conduct of persons who are actually members of the Armed Services. As noted by Justice Harlan in his O’Callahan dissent, there is no evidence in the debates over the adoption of the Constitution that the Framers intended the language of Clause 14 to be accorded anything other than its plain meaning. Alexander Hamilton described these powers of Congress “essential to the common defense” as follows:

“These powers ought to exist without limitation, because it is impossible to foresee or define the extent and variety of national exigencies, or the correspondent extent and variety of the means which may be necessary to satisfy them. . . .

* * *

“. . . Are fleets and armies and revenues necessary for this purpose [common safety]? The government of the Union must be empowered to pass all laws, and to make all regulations which have relation to them.” The Federalist No. 23, pp. 152-154 (E. Bourne ed. 1947).

The O’Callahan Court’s historical foundation for its holding rests on the view that “[b]oth in England prior to the American Revolution and in our own national history military trial of soldiers committing civilian offenses has been viewed with suspicion.” 395 U.S.., at 268. According to the Court, the historical evidence demonstrates that, during the late 17th and 18th centuries in England as well as the early years of this country, courts-martial did not have authority to try soldiers for civilian offenses. . . .

The O’Callahan Court’s representation of English history following the Mutiny Act of 1689, however, is less than accurate. In particular, the Court posited that “[i]t was . . . the rule in Britain at the time of the American Revolution that a soldier could not be tried for a civilian offense committed in Britain; instead military officers were required to use their energies and office to insure that the accused soldier would be tried before a civil court.” 395 U.S.., at 269. In making this statement, the Court was apparently referring to Section XI, Article I, of the British Articles of War in effect at the time of the Revolution. This Article provided:

> “Whenever any Officer or Soldier shall be accused of a Capital Crime, or of having used Violence, or committed any Offence against the Persons or Property of Our Subjects, . . . the Commanding Officer, and Officers of every Regiment, Troop, or Party to which the . . . accused shall belong, are hereby required, upon Application duly made by, or in behalf of the Party or Parties injured, to use . . . utmost Endeavors to deliver over such accused . . . to the Civil Magistrate.” British Articles of War of 1774, reprinted in G. Davis, Military Law of the United States 581, 589 (3d rev. ed. 1915).
This provision, however, is not the sole statement in the Articles bearing on court-martial jurisdiction over civilian offenses. Specifically, Section XIV, Article XVI, provided that all officers and soldiers who “shall maliciously destroy any Property whatsoever belonging to any of Our Subjects, unless by Order of the then Commander in Chief of Our Forces, to annoy Rebels or other Enemies in Arms against Us, he or they that shall be found guilty of offending herein shall (besides such Penalties as they are liable to by law) be punished according to the Nature and Degree of the Offence, by the Judgment of a Regimental or General Court Martial.” Id., at 593.

Under this provision, military tribunals had jurisdiction over offenses punishable under civil law. Accordingly, the O'Callahan Court erred in suggesting that, at the time of the American Revolution, military tribunals in England were available “only where ordinary civil courts were unavailable.” 395 U.S., at 269, and n. 11.

The history of early American practice furnishes even less support to O'Calla han's historical thesis. The American Articles of War of 1776, which were based on the British Articles, contained a provision similar to Section XI, Article I, of the British Articles, requiring commanding officers to deliver over to civil magistrates any officer or soldier accused of “a capital crime, . . . having used violence, or . . . any offence against the persons or property of the good people of any of the United American States” upon application by or on behalf of an injured party. It has been postulated that American courts-martial had jurisdiction over the crimes described in this provision where no application for a civilian trial was made by or on behalf of the injured civilian. Indeed, American military records reflect trials by court-martial during the late 18th century for offenses against civilians and punishable under civil law, such as theft and assault.

The authority to try soldiers for civilian crimes may be found in the much-disputed “general article” of the 1776 Articles of War, which allowed court-martial jurisdiction over “[a]ll crimes not capital, and all disorders and neglects which officers and soldiers may be guilty of, to the prejudice of good order and military discipline.” American Articles of War of 1776, Section XVIII, Article 5. Some authorities, such as those cited by the O'Callahan Court, interpreted this language as limiting court-martial jurisdiction to crimes that had a direct impact on military discipline. Several others, however, have interpreted the language as encompassing all noncapital crimes proscribed by the civil law. . . .

George Washington also seems to have held this view. When informed of the decision of a military court that a complaint by a civilian against a member of the military should be redressed only in a civilian court, he stated in a General Order dated February 24, 1779:

“All improper treatment of an inhabitant by an officer or soldier being destructive of good order and discipline as well as subversive of the rights of society is as much a breach of military, as civil law and as punishable by the one as the other.” 14 Writings of George Washington 140-141 (J. Fitzpatrick ed. 1936).

We think the history of court-martial jurisdiction in England and in this country during the 17th and 18th centuries is far too ambiguous to justify the restriction on the plain language of Clause 14 which O'Callahan imported into it. There is no doubt that the English practice during this period shows a strong desire in that country to transfer from the Crown to Parliament the control of the scope of court-martial jurisdiction. And it is equally true that Parliament was chary in granting jurisdiction to courts-martial, although not as chary as the O'Callahan opinion suggests. But reading Clause 14 consistently with its plain language does not disserve that concern; Congress, and not the Executive, was given the authority to make rules for the regulation of the Armed Forces.

* * *

When considered together with the doubtful foundations of O'Callahan, the confusion wrought by the decision leads us to conclude that we should read Clause 14 in accord with the plain meaning of its language as we did in the many years before O'Callahan was decided. That case’s novel approach to court-martial jurisdiction must bow “to the lessons of experience and the force of better reasoning.” Burnet v. Coronado Oil & Gas Co., 285 U.S. 393, 406-408 (1932) (Brandeis, J., dissenting). We therefore hold that the requirements of the Constitution are not violated where, as here, a court-martial is convened to try a serviceman who was a member of the Armed Services at the time of the offense charged. The judgment of the Court of Military Appeals is Affirmed.

Justice STEVENS, concurring in the judgment.

Today’s unnecessary overruling of precedent is most unwise. The opinion of the United States Court of Military Appeals demonstrates that petitioner’s offenses were sufficiently “service connected” to confer jurisdiction on the military tribunal.

Justice MARSHALL, with whom Justice BRENNAN joins, and with whom Justice BLACKMUN joins . . . [in part], dissenting..

* * *

The requirement of service connection recognized in O'Callahan has a legitimate basis in constitutional language and a solid historical foundation. It should be applied in this case.

* * *

Points for Discussion

1. If a court-martial could not try soldiers for crimes that are not service-related, could they still be tried by some other court?
2. What advantages and disadvantages did the O'Callahan decision have for soldiers and the Armed Forces?

3. Could Congress by statute strip courts-martial of jurisdiction to try servicemembers for crimes that are not service related? If so, why might Congress not have done so?

Overlapping Jurisdiction

Servicemembers who commit crimes in the United States potentially could face prosecution in any of three different court systems. For example, suppose that Army Private Pogie sells marijuana in Virginia. He could be prosecuted in a court-martial for violating Article 112a, UCMJ. Alternatively, he could be prosecuted in federal court for violating federal anti-narcotics laws applicable to all persons within the United States. In addition, he could be prosecuted in Virginia state court for violating a Virginia state anti-narcotics law. Private Pogie's status as a servicemember does not exempt him from the application of any federal or state laws.

That said, it is most likely that Private Pogie would be tried in a court-martial. The Department of Justice and the Department of Defense have entered into a memorandum of understanding, reprinted in Appendix 3 of the Manual for Courts-Martial, that establishes a presumption that servicemembers will be tried in courts-martial rather than federal district court for crimes usually prosecuted under the UCMJ. The Fifth Amendment's prohibition against Double Jeopardy prevents a servicemember from being tried by both a federal district court and a court-martial.

Most state prosecutors are eager to allow military prosecutors to bring cases against servicemembers. But nothing prevents state prosecution of a servicemember for violating state law. Indeed, because the states and federal government are separate sovereigns, a servicemember could be tried in both a state court and court-martial for the same offense without violating the prohibition against double-jeopardy. The Supreme Court has explained:

The dual sovereignty doctrine is founded on the common-law conception of crime as an offense against the sovereignty of the government. When a defendant in a single act violates the “peace and dignity” of two sovereigns by breaking the laws of each, he has committed two distinct “offences.” United States v. Lanza, 260 U.S. 377, 382 (1922).

Heath v. Alabama, 474 U.S. 82, 88 (1985). Although dual prosecutions are rare, they do happen. Consider the following case:
De GIULIO, Senior Judge:

Appellant [Major David P. Schneider, U.S. Army] was tried by general court-martial for attempted murder of his wife and two specifications of conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman by committing perjury and by having sexual intercourse with and otherwise engaging in a sexual or other improper affair with a woman not his wife in violation of Articles 80 and 133, Uniform Code of Military Justice, 10 U.S.C. §§ 880 and 933 (1982) [hereinafter UCMJ]. Contrary to his pleas, a court consisting of officer members found him guilty and sentenced him to dismissal, confinement for twenty-three years, and total forfeitures. The convening authority approved the sentence except that he conditionally suspended the forfeiture in excess of $400.00 pay per month until execution of the dismissal.

Appellant asserts several errors which we find to be without merit. We affirm the findings of guilty and the sentence.

This is a case where the offenses were motivated by love and money. In 1987, appellant was assigned to the Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory in California. He moved to the area with his wife and two children. While working at the laboratory, he met Paula, with whom he worked for a time on a daily basis. In August 1987, Paula’s friends asked Paula, the appellant, and appellant’s family to accompany them on a boat trip. Appellant indicated that his wife and children would not go because his wife feared for the safety of the children but, if permitted, he would go. During the boat trip which lasted overnight, appellant and Paula shared adjoining quarters at the opposite end of the boat from where the other passengers were quartered. In April of 1989, according to Paula, her relationship with appellant became sexual and intimate. ²

In July 1989, appellant told his wife that he had to go on a mission for the laboratory; but, due to its classified nature, he could not tell her of its location, other details, or point of contact for emergencies. In fact, appellant and Paula traveled to Hawaii where they stayed together in the King Kamehameha Hotel, Kailua, Hawaii.

In 1989, appellant was assigned to attend the U.S. Army Command and General Staff College, Fort Leavenworth, Kansas. At Fort Leavenworth, he moved his family into government quarters. In August 1989, he met with an insurance agent. Although the agent recommended appellant increase insurance coverage on himself, appellant declined to do so but stated he wanted an additional $150,000 coverage on his wife, Debbie. This policy, with appellant as the beneficiary, was effective 1 October 1989.

---

² Paula did not testify at the court-martial because she could not be found. Her prior testimony at appellant’s state criminal trial was admitted into evidence. It is evident from that testimony that she was reluctant to testify and had refused to talk to prosecutors before she testified.

In the fall of 1989, appellant purchased a home in Tracey, California. He convinced Debbie that her name should not be on the title. He used the proceeds from the sale of the family home near his prior assignment for the purchase of this house. He told her that he had to go to California to take care of details of this purchase over Labor Day weekend of 1989. He spent that weekend with Paula. Paula told a friend that it was the best weekend of her life.

Numerous telephone calls were made between appellant at Fort Leavenworth and Paula in California.

After returning home from a party on the evening of 20 October 1989, Debbie went to bed and fell asleep. She awoke with intense pain in her head and was pulled up to a sitting position on the bed. She saw appellant standing next to the bed. The toilet tank lid from the bathroom was on the floor near his feet.

The toilet tank lid was broken. She felt a baseball-sized lump on her head. The lump was “oozing.”

She brushed small pieces of porcelain from her hair. She described appellant, who was normally calm and cool in time of crisis, as visibly shaken. He stated repeatedly, “you must have hit your head.” Appellant assisted her to the bathroom where she sat on the toilet. When she began shaking, he helped her to the bathroom floor and covered her with a quilt. He wanted to take her for medical attention but she wanted only to go back to bed. He assisted her to the bed. The next morning, he took her to the medical facility. When asked what had happened to her head, appellant stated to medical personnel that Debbie was sleepwalking, picked up the toilet tank lid, tripped, and hit her head. The statement that she was injured while sleepwalking was recorded on medical documents. Evidence of record indicates appellant’s wife had never walked in her sleep. When she returned home, Debbie found small pieces of the toilet tank lid on her pillow. This incident was the subject of the specification alleging attempted murder.

On 28 October 1989, appellant took his wife for a “romantic” overnight stay in a local downtown hotel. The room was on the top floor. After dinner he tried to get her to drink more champagne than she normally consumed. After they went to their room, appellant tried to get her out on the balcony. She refused because it was too cold and because she was afraid of heights.

On 4 November 1989, appellant and his wife were to attend the Armor Ball. Without her knowledge, appellant made arrangements for another “romantic” night at Embassy Suites Hotel. She discovered his plans when the babysitter told him she could not stay overnight. Appellant decided to go to the hotel after the ball anyway but to return home early. At the ball Debbie enjoyed the dancing and only left early to go to the hotel at appellant’s insistence. Although appellant had asked for an eighth floor room when making reservations, he was given a room on the seventh floor.
Two sixteen-year-old girls, Chantel and Brandi, who were on the eighth floor, observed appellant and his wife when they entered the hotel. They were attracted to the couple because of their “extravagant attire.” They watched appellant and his wife ride the glass elevator to the eighth floor and watched them walk side by side down the hallway. Brandi looked away. Chantel saw appellant make vigorous hand movements in front of his wife as she faced him with her back to the rail. She observed appellant put his left arm around Debbie where the rail met her back, put his right hand on her chest, and flip her over the rail. Chantel watched Debbie plunge 70-80 feet and hit a table on the atrium floor.\(^3\) Chantel watched appellant look over the railing, walk toward the elevator, walk back to the railing and call for someone to call an ambulance. He then walked back to the elevator and proceeded down. Testimony indicates that appellant’s conduct when he reached the atrium floor can be described as cool and collected. Debbie’s pelvis was fractured in thirteen places. Both left and right femurs were broken in several places, with one bone penetrating her abdominal cavity, damaging her colon. She also had a fractured ankle and a fractured rib. Her colon injury required a temporary colostomy. While his wife was being wheeled into the operating room, he asked the doctor to give her a “tummy tuck.” Debbie’s roommate at the hospital and the roommate’s mother described appellant’s attitude toward his wife while she was hospitalized as cool and distant. He was also described as a “jerk” in his attitude toward his wife.

On 2 December 1989, Debbie returned home from the hospital confined to a wheelchair. On 4 December, appellant told her that he didn’t love her anymore and was getting a divorce. On 5 December, in an interview with local police, appellant admitted having an affair with Paula, stated he loved her and hoped to marry her when his divorce was final. On 6 December, appellant filed for divorce. Later, appellant was charged by local authorities with first degree assault for the incident at the Embassy Suites Hotel on 4 November. On 18 December, appellant moved to have his petition for divorce dismissed.

At his trial for attempted murder in state court, appellant testified that, at the Embassy Suites Hotel, they mistakenly went to the eighth floor. He told his wife that he wanted to carry her across the threshold. He picked her up and was carrying her at high port when she told him they were in the wrong place. He turned and in doing so tripped. His wife slipped from his grasp, causing her to fall over the balcony railing to the atrium floor. He testified that he did not intend to injure his wife. Appellant was acquitted of this offense in the state court.

At the state trial, appellant also testified regarding the October toilet tank lid incident. He stated that his wife went to bed, and he stayed up to do his school homework. Before he went to bed, he noted the toilet was running. He removed the tank lid and set it down against the cabinet. He fixed the toilet but decided to leave the tank lid off. He then went to bed and to sleep. He was awakened by a motion on the bed or noise. His wife was sitting on the bed, moaning, with her hand to her head. He got up to go to her but stepped on something. When he turned on the light, he discovered it to be “shards of obviously pieces of the toilet tank lid.” She complained her head hurt, but upon his inquiry stated she didn’t know what had happened. He stated that it was clear to him that she had hurt herself somehow. He helped her to the bathroom where she started to go into shock. He sat her on the toilet and turned on the faucet in the tub, in case he needed water. He then wrapped her in a blanket and checked to see if she could discern the number of fingers he held before her. He wanted to take her to the hospital but she refused. He concluded she did not have a fracture, gave her aspirin, and took her to bed. He testified at his state trial that he told personnel at the hospital that, “She was probably sleep-walking. I don’t know or words to that effect.” He testified, “I don’t believe I would have told them she was sleepwalking, ‘cause Debbie has never slept-walked, and so I wouldn’t say that.”

---

\(^3\) Debbie has no memory of this event from the time she entered the hotel.

* * *

. . . [A]ppellant contends that the military judge erred by denying a motion to dismiss the specification of perjury because it violated appellant’s right against double jeopardy. Appellant’s argument is that his testimony in his state court trial went to the heart of the issue of the offense for which he was tried and was determined favorable to him. Thus, he argues, the government is collaterally estopped from charging appellant with perjury for his testimony. We do not agree with appellant that double jeopardy applies here.

* * *

The findings of guilty and the sentence are affirmed.
Judge HAESSIG and Judge ARKOW concur.

[The Court of Military Appeals affirmed this decision, 38 M.J. 387 (C.M.A. 1993), and the Supreme Court denied certiorari, 511 U.S. 1106 (1994).—Ed.]

Points for Discussion

1. Why do you think both state and military authorities wanted to prosecute Major Schneider? Is it unfair that he must face two prosecutions?

2. Would it make any difference if the accused was acquitted of capital murder in state court and then was recalled from retirement to face capital charges at a court-martial? See Hennis v. Hemlick, 2012 WL 120054 (4th Cir. 2012).
1-4. Role of the Commander and Unlawful Command Influence

The Military Justice system rests on two key postulates that are not inherently in conflict, but that may collide in some instances. The first postulate, clearly and concisely articulated by the President in the Manual for Courts-Martial, is: “Commanders are responsible for good order and discipline in their commands.” MCM, pt. V, ¶1.d.(1). The second postulate, expressed by Congress directly in the UCMJ, is: “No person subject to [the UCMJ] may attempt to coerce or, by any unauthorized means, influence the action of a court-martial or any other military tribunal or any member thereof . . . .” Article 37, UCMJ, 10 U.S.C. § 837(a).

The first postulate rests on the idea that a fighting force will be ineffective and perhaps dangerous unless it obeys orders and deports itself in a controlled manner. The only person who can achieve good order and discipline is the unit’s commander. The commander accomplishes this difficult task primarily through strong leadership and effective drills and training. But these measures are not always enough. When servicemembers commit serious misconduct, the commander may decide that it is necessary to invoke the military justice system. Crimes that go unprosecuted may lead to other wrongdoing, and the breakdown of all order in the unit.

The second postulate rests on the idea that the military justice system must be just. A court-martial must be a real court, where guilt or innocence is determined by disinterested judges and panel members based solely on the facts and the law. Nothing could harm morale more, and in turn frustrate the mission of a military unit, than a belief among servicemembers that they may be punished for acts they did not commit or that they may be treated overly harshly for crimes they did commit.

A potential conflict may arise because of the hierarchical nature of military life. It is not difficult to imagine that, without constant vigilance, subordinate participants in the military justice system could be influenced by their superiors, resulting in unfairness to the accused. The general or admiral who convenes a court-martial in the belief that a prosecution is necessary typically is senior in rank to the military judge and the military lawyers involved in the trial, is senior in rank to all of the witnesses who are to testify, and is senior in rank to all of the officers and enlisted members who sit in judgment of the accused. The system must provide protections so that everyone involved is not improperly influenced from those above.

The military justice system attempts to prevent this conflict in several ways. It makes improper command influence a crime. It pushes the initial decisions on how to address misconduct to the lowest level. As described above, the servicemember’s immediate commander decides in the first instance how to address alleged misconduct. The immediate commander can forward the matter to a superior commander, or the superior commander can take the case from the immediate commander, but the superior commander cannot tell the immediate commander what to do. There also can be no service-wide or unit-wide prosecutorial policies.

How well do these measures work? In general, most observers consider the military justice system to be fair. Occasionally, however, allegations of misconduct arise. The following cases clarify the standards and provide modern illustrations.

UNITED STATES v. BOYCE

U.S. Court of Appeals for the Armed Forces
76 M.J. 242 (C.A.A.F. 2017)

Judge OHLSON delivered the opinion of the Court.

Contrary to Appellant’s pleas, a military panel with enlisted representation sitting as a general court-martial convicted Appellant of one specification of rape on divers occasions and two specifications of assault consummated by a battery in violation of Articles 120 and 128, Uniform Code of Military Justice (UCMJ), 10 U.S.C. §§ 920, 928 (2012). The panel acquitted Appellant of one specification of rape and two specifications of assault.

* * *

We granted review of the following issue:

The Chief of Staff of the Air Force advised the convening authority that, unless he retired, the Secretary of the Air Force would fire him. Was the convening authority’s subsequent referral of charges unlawfully influenced by the threat to his position and career?

Following our review of the entire record, we conclude that an objective disinterested observer with knowledge of all the facts and circumstances would harbor a significant doubt about the fairness of the court-martial proceedings and therefore conclude that there is the appearance of unlawful command influence in this case. We therefore reverse the findings and the sentence in this case without prejudice and return the case to the Judge Advocate General with a rehearing authorized.

I. Background

The underlying facts leading to the charges and convictions in this sexual assault case are not directly relevant to the issue before us. We therefore proceed only with a recitation of those facts that are pertinent to the unlawful command influence allegation.

During the relevant time period, Lieutenant General (Lt Gen) Craig A. Franklin was the commander of the Third Air Force. On February 26, 2013, Lt Gen Franklin used his clemency authority under Article 60, UCMJ, 10 U.S.C. § 860 (2012), to set aside the findings and sentence in the unrelated case of United States v. Wilkerson. Wilkerson was a lieutenant colonel (Lt Col) in the Air Force and had been convicted at court-martial of aggravated sexual assault. Lt Gen Franklin’s decision to set aside Wilkerson’s conviction was against the advice of his Staff Judge Advocate (SJA), Colonel (Col) Joseph Bialke, who recommended clemency in the form of an adjusted sentence.

In a March 12, 2013, letter to then-Secretary of the Air Force Michael B. Donley, Lt Gen Franklin sought to explain his decision in the Wilkerson case. He wrote:

Obviously it would have been exceedingly less volatile for the Air Force and for me professionally, to have simply approved the finding of guilty. This would have been an act of cowardice on my part and a breach of my integrity. As I have previously stated, after considering all matters in the entire record of trial, I hold a genuine and reasonable doubt that Lt Col Wilkerson committed the crime of sexual assault.

Also on March 12, 2013, General (Gen) Mark A. Welsh III, who recently had been promoted to Chief of Staff of the Air Force, e-mailed Lt Gen Franklin, writing: “It’s going to be a little uncomfortable for awhile. Hang in there.”

Lt Gen Franklin’s clemency action garnered considerable negative attention from Congress and the media. However, despite this backlash, Lt Gen Franklin continued to defend his Wilkerson decision. Indeed, he later tried to intervene on behalf of then-Lt Col Wilkerson in order to have his promotion to colonel approved upon his release from confinement.

In a different case addressing sexual assault, United States v. Oropeza, Lt Gen Franklin explained his thought process prior to dismissing the charges in the Wilkerson case as follows:

Yes, I thought about [my career advancement in the military] just knowing that this was probably going to get Congressional interest and the Senate, who confirms GOs [general officers] for Three and Four Star billets, so whether or not I was going to go to another Three-Star Billet after this job, or maybe get a Four-Star billet, you know, I knew this would probably make this my last job potentially, so yeah, I knew this was going to have probably [sic] future impact on me.

When asked if he had any regrets about his decision because of the subsequent political “fallout,” Lt Gen Franklin replied, “No, I’ll tell you I am sleeping like a baby at nighttime. I made the right decision even amidst all the attacks.”

On September 3, 2013, Lt Gen Franklin declined to refer charges against an airman in the case of United States v. Wright. This was done prior to trial and consistent with the recommendation of his SJA, Col Bialke. The charges in that case also involved sexual assault allegations. See 75 M.J. 501, 502 (A.F. Ct. Crim. App. 2015) (en banc). Shortly after Lt Gen Franklin dismissed the charges and specifications, then-Judge Advocate General of the Air Force, Lt Gen Richard Harding, called Col Bialke regarding the Wright case. Id. at 503. Col Bialke said that Lt Gen Harding told him: “the failure to refer the case to trial would place the Air Force in a difficult position with Congress; absent a ‘smoking gun,’ victims are to be believed and their cases referred to trial; and dismissing the charges without meeting with the named victim violated an Air
On December 20, 2013, Deborah Lee James was appointed as Secretary of the Air Force. On December 23, 2013, Lt Gen Franklin read what he described as an article in which a senator indicated he would be retiring soon. On December 27, 2013, the Chief of Staff of the Air Force, Gen Welsh, telephoned Lt Gen Franklin and informed him that the new Secretary had “lost confidence” in him and that he had two options: voluntarily retire from the Air Force at the lower grade of major general, or wait for the Secretary to remove him from his command in the immediate future. Three hours after this call, Lt Gen Franklin decided to retire. In his written retirement request, Lt Gen Franklin stated: “My decisions as a General Court Martial [sic] convening authority [(GCMCA)] have come under great public scrutiny,” and “media attention . . . will likely occur on subsequent sexual assault cases I deal with.”

On the same day that Lt Gen Franklin was contacted by the Chief of Staff, he received the referral package regarding Appellant’s case, which included sexual assault charges. On January 6, 2014, Lt Gen Franklin referred Appellant’s case to a general court-martial. Two days later he publicly announced that he would step down from his position as Third Air Force Commander on January 31, 2014, and would officially retire two months later.

On January 28, 2014, Lt Gen Franklin was interviewed by Appellant’s defense counsel. The affidavit documenting this interview reflects that Lt Gen Franklin stated the following: he decided to refer Appellant’s case “independently”; there “probably is an appearance of UCI [unlawful command influence] but I wasn’t affected by it”; and it “would be foolish to say there is no appearance of UCI.”

On February 13, 2014, the Government provided an affidavit to the trial court in response to a defense motion to dismiss all charges against Appellant due to unlawful command influence. In this affidavit, Lt Gen Franklin stated: “Any comments by superior government officials, both civilian and military, had absolutely no impact on my decision-making as a convening authority,” and “I did not and would not allow improper outside influence to impact my independent and impartial decisions as a GCMCA.” However, he also conceded in the affidavit that his decision in the Wilkerson case “has been and continues to be a subject of substantial public controversy,” and noted that the charges which he had declined to refer in the Wright case “had been re-preferred by the Air Force District of Washington.”

In ruling on the defense’s motion, the military judge stated that although the defense had met its initial burden of demonstrating that there was some evidence of unlawful command influence:

[I]t had absolutely no impact on this particular case. There could be an argument, in fact, that General Franklin may be the most bombproof of any convening authority out there simply because of . . . his retirement, and the fact that he has, on occasion, seemingly gone against the interests of others in the military.
In his later written ruling, the military judge stated that the “Court is convinced beyond a reasonable doubt that there was no UCI or apparent UCI in [either] the accusatorial or adjudicative phases of this proceeding.” On appeal, the Air Force Court of Criminal Appeals concurred with the military judge’s analysis.

II. Applicable Law

It has long been a canon of this Court’s jurisprudence that “[unlawful] command influence is the mortal enemy of military justice.” United States v. Thomas, 22 M.J. 388, 393 (C.M.A. 1986). “Indeed,” as Chief Judge Everett noted in Thomas, “a prime motivation for establishing a civilian Court of Military Appeals was to erect a further bulwark against impermissible command influence.” Id. And importantly, our Court’s fulfillment of that responsibility “is fundamental to fostering public confidence in the . . . fairness of our system of justice.” United States v. Harvey, 64 M.J. 13, 17 (C.A.A.F. 2006).

Two types of unlawful command influence can arise in the military justice system: actual unlawful command influence and the appearance of unlawful command influence. From the outset, actual unlawful command influence has commonly been recognized as occurring when there is an improper manipulation of the criminal justice process which negatively affects the fair handling and/or disposition of a case. See United States v. Allen, 33 M.J. 209, 212 (C.M.A. 1991); see also United States v. Allen, 31 M.J. 572, 584 (N.M.C.M.R. 1990) (“Unlawful command influence . . . is impermissible command control.”). As reflected below, however, it took decades for this Court’s jurisprudence to define the contours of what constitutes a meritorious claim of an appearance of unlawful command influence.

Initially our Court did not differentiate between actual unlawful command influence and the appearance of unlawful command influence. Over the years, however, we have explored the distinctions between the two.

[T]he unfortunate circumstance that the convening authority had previously and openly damned one of these functionaries as an abuser of discretion gives the conduct of the trial an especially unpleasant aroma. Viewing the record as a whole, I am fortified in my belief that the appearance of “command influence” is vivid enough here to require reversal.

(Emphasis added.)

The first time that a majority of the Court of Military Appeals cited an appearance of unlawful command influence as a basis for reversing the conviction of a servicemember occurred ten years later. In United States v. Johnson, 34 C.M.R. 328, 331 (1964), the Court stated:
In approaching a problem of this nature, the apparent existence of “command control,” through the medium of pretrial communication with court members, is as much to be condemned as its actual existence. As a matter of principle, any doubt in the matter must be resolved in favor of the accused.

(Emphasis added.)

The Court further stated, “The appearance, or the existence, of command influence provides a presumption of prejudice.” Id. (emphasis added).

It took another three decades for the standard that we now use in determining whether there was an appearance of unlawful command influence to emerge. Once again, it was a separate opinion that led the way. Judge Wiss stated:

One judge even went so far as to suggest [that] “[t]he practice of ranking appellate judges should be discontinued. In the absence of specific objective criteria, an objective, disinterested observer fully informed of the facts would entertain a significant doubt that justice was being done” and would perceive an appearance of command influence.

United States v. Mitchell, 39 M.J. 131, 151 (C.M.A. 1994) (Wiss, J., concurring in part, dissenting in part, and concurring in the result) (alteration in original) (quoting United States v. Mitchell, 37 M.J. 903, 930 (N.M.C.M.R. 1993) (Reed, J., concurring in the result)). This language was adopted in a majority opinion four years later. See United States v. Calhoun, 49 M.J. 485, 488 (C.A.A.F. 1998) (“[We] decline to enshrine a right to private civilian counsel paid for by the Government unless an objective, disinterested observer, with knowledge of all the facts, could reasonably conclude that there was at least an appearance of unlawful command influence over all military and other government defense counsel.” (emphasis added)).

A further refinement of this Court’s jurisprudence regarding the appearance of unlawful command influence occurred a few years later. Quoting United States v. Rosser, 6 M.J. 267, 271 (C.M.A. 1979), and citing “‘the spirit of the Code,’” this Court in United States v. Stoneman favorably cited our previous observation that “[t]he appearance of unlawful command influence is as devastating to the military justice system as the actual manipulation of any given trial.” 57 M.J. 35, 42 (C.A.A.F. 2002). And importantly, in Stoneman we more explicitly explained the distinction between actual unlawful command influence and the appearance of unlawful command influence:

The question whether there is an appearance of unlawful command influence is similar in one respect to the question whether there is implied bias, because both are judged objectively, through the eyes of the community. . . . Even if there was no actual unlawful command influence, there may be a question whether the influence of command placed an “intolerable strain on public perception of the military justice system.” See United States v. Wiesen, 56 M.J. 172, 175 (2001).

Id. at 42–43 (emphasis added) (citations omitted).
Chief Judge Erdmann wove together the various strands of our jurisprudence on this topic a decade ago in United States v. Lewis, 63 M.J. 405, 413 (C.A.A.F. 2006). In doing so, he first stated that in order for a claim of actual unlawful command influence to prevail, an accused must meet the burden of demonstrating: (a) facts, which if true, constitute unlawful command influence; (b) the court-martial proceedings were unfair to the accused (i.e., the accused was prejudiced); and (c) the unlawful command influence was the cause of that unfairness. Id.

Next, in regard to an appearance of unlawful command influence, Chief Judge Erdmann wrote:

Congress and this court are concerned not only with eliminating actual unlawful command influence, but also with “eliminating even the appearance of unlawful command influence at courts-martial.” United States v. Rosser, 6 M.J. 267, 271 (C.M.A. 1979). . . . [T]he “‘appearance of unlawful command influence is as devastating to the military justice system as the actual manipulation of any given trial.’” United States v. Simpson, 58 M.J. at 368 [2003] (quoting Stoneman, 57 M.J. at 42–43). Thus, “disposition of an issue of unlawful command influence falls short if it fails to take into consideration . . . the appearance of unlawful command influence at courts-martial.” Id.

Whether the conduct of the Government in this case created an appearance of unlawful command influence is determined objectively. Stoneman, 57 M.J. at 42. “Even if there was no actual unlawful command influence, there may be a question whether the influence of command placed an ‘intolerable strain on public perception of the military justice system.’” Id. at 42–43 (quoting United States v. Wiesen, 56 M.J. 172, 175 (C.A.A.F. 2001)). The objective test for the appearance of unlawful command influence is similar to the tests we apply in reviewing questions of implied bias on the part of court members or in reviewing challenges to military judges for an appearance of conflict of interest. We focus upon the perception of fairness in the military justice system as viewed through the eyes of a reasonable member of the public. Thus, the appearance of unlawful command influence will exist where an objective, disinterested observer, fully informed of all the facts and circumstances, would harbor a significant doubt about the fairness of the proceeding.

Id. at 415 (alteration in original) (citations omitted).

As can be seen from the above, unlike actual unlawful command influence where prejudice to the accused is required, no such showing is required for a meritorious claim of an appearance of unlawful command influence. Rather, the prejudice involved in the latter instance is the damage to the public’s perception of the fairness of the military justice system as a whole and not the prejudice to the individual accused. Consequently, consistent with Chief Judge Erdmann’s opinion in Lewis, it is sufficient for an accused to demonstrate the following factors in support of a claim of an appearance of unlawful command influence:
influence: (a) facts, which if true, constitute unlawful command influence; and (b) this unlawful command influence placed an “intolerable strain” on the public’s perception of the military justice system because “an objective, disinterested observer, fully informed of all the facts and circumstances, would harbor a significant doubt about the fairness of the proceeding.” Id. (internal quotation marks omitted) (citation omitted).

III. Analysis

Appellant is challenging his convictions on the basis of both actual unlawful command influence and the appearance of unlawful command influence. We first turn our attention to the issue of whether there was actual unlawful command influence in this case. We hold there was not. Specifically, we conclude that even assuming an unrebutted showing of unlawful command influence by the Secretary of the Air Force and/or the Chief of Staff of the Air Force, there is an insufficient basis to deduce that Appellant personally suffered any prejudice.

In reaching this conclusion, we note the following: a convening authority merely applies a reasonable grounds standard in determining whether to refer charges to a general court-martial (which is quite a low standard), Rule for Courts-Martial 601(d)(1); there were two witnesses—not just one—who alleged abuse by Appellant; there was physical evidence corroborating the allegations against Appellant; there was evidence that Appellant had previously engaged in similar violence; the Article 32, UCMJ, 10 U.S.C. § 832 (2012), Investigating Officer (IO) recommended referral of all sexual assault charges; and every subordinate commander and the SJA recommended referral of all charges against Appellant. Thus, there is no reasonable likelihood that a different convening authority standing in the shoes of Lt Gen Franklin would have made a different referral decision. Accordingly, Appellant is entitled to no relief based on a claim of actual unlawful command influence.

We reach a different result, however, in regard to Appellant’s claim of an appearance of unlawful command influence. In reaching this conclusion we first address the military judge’s determination that Lt Gen Franklin was “bombproof” in regard to exercising his discretion as the general court-martial convening authority (GCMCA) in this case. As the Government’s appellate brief memorably characterizes it, the military judge’s reasoning was as follows:

[O]f all the general court-martial convening authorities that the Appellant could have ended up with, he was fortunate enough to have drawn a convening authority who had a long history of ignoring political pressure, and, by the time he reviewed the Appellant’s case, no longer had anything to gain or lose when it came to his Air Force career.

We conclude that the military judge’s determination that Lt Gen Franklin was “bombproof” is not supported by the facts and circumstances surrounding this case. (Although it is a close question, we view the military judge’s determination that Lt Gen Franklin was “bombproof” as being a legal conclusion rather than a factual finding (i.e., based on the facts in this case, the military judge reached the legal conclusion that Lt Gen Franklin was immune to unlawful command influence.) Specifically, we note that the personnel actions previously taken by the Secretary of the Air Force and/or the Chief of Staff of the Air Force did not inoculate Lt Gen Franklin from further negative personnel actions. For example, if the Secretary came to believe that Lt Gen Franklin was obstinately “refusing” to refer “another” meritorious case to a general court-martial, she could have removed him immediately from his position of command—which likely would have carried significant consequences in terms of adverse public attention and post-military career opportunities. Thus, an objective disinterested observer would not agree that Lt Gen Franklin had nothing to gain or lose here. Moreover, we note that in light of the attendant circumstances in this case, if anything, Lt Gen Franklin would have been more acutely aware than other GCMCA’s about how closely his referral decisions were being scrutinized by his superiors and about the potential personal consequences of “ignoring political pressure” when making those referral decisions. Thus, we conclude that, at a minimum, Lt Gen Franklin was no more “bombproof” than any other GCMCA.

We next address the military judge’s heavy reliance on Lt Gen Franklin’s assurance that his decision to refer the instant case to a general court-martial was not affected by the previous personnel action taken against him. Specifically, Lt Gen Franklin stated that he “did not and would not allow improper outside influences to impact [his] independent and impartial decisions as a GCMCA.” But that statement by Lt Gen Franklin did not stand in isolation; in his January 28, 2014, interview with defense counsel for this case, he admirably conceded that there “probably is an appearance of UCI,” and it “would be foolish to say there is no appearance of UCI.”

As we can see from these statements, Lt Gen Franklin himself acknowledged the existence of many of the essential facets of a valid claim of an appearance of unlawful command influence. We therefore conclude that the military judge’s heavy reliance on Lt Gen Franklin’s assurances in this case was misplaced.

Next, we address the Government’s argument that there can be no finding of unlawful command influence here because “no one in a position of authority over Lt Gen Franklin . . . even knew of the existence of [this] specific case.” This argument is unavailing. It is irrelevant whether the Secretary of the Air Force or the Chief of Staff of the Air Force sought to affect Lt Gen Franklin’s independent discretionary decision-making as a GCMCA in this particular case. No showing of knowledge or intent on the part of government actors is required in order for an appellant to successfully demonstrate that an appearance of unlawful command influence arose in a specific case. See Biagase, 50 M.J. at 151. In cases involving unlawful command influence, the key to our analysis is effect—not knowledge or intent.

Having disposed of these preliminary matters, we now turn our attention to the two principal issues at hand. First, did the Secretary of the Air Force and/or the Chief of Staff of the Air Force engage in conduct that constituted unlawful command influence? See Salyer, 72 M.J. at 423. And second, if there was unlawful command influence, would an objective, disinterested observer, fully informed of all the facts and circumstances, harbor a significant doubt about the fairness of the proceeding? See id. We conclude that the answer to both questions is “Yes.”

In concluding that Appellant has met his burden of showing “some evidence” that the conduct of the Secretary of the Air Force and/or the Chief of Staff of the Air Force constituted unlawful command influence, we note the following points. See Stoneman, 57 M.J. at 41.

• Prior to the confirmation of Deborah Lee James as Secretary of the Air Force, a key member of the Senate Armed Services Committee who would later vote on her nomination commented on Lt Gen Franklin’s decision to set aside the findings and sentence in the Wilkerson case. The senator specifically stated that commanders needed to be held “accountable” for their handling of sexual assault charges.

• Ms. James subsequently was confirmed by the Senate, and on December 20, 2013, she was sworn in as Secretary of the Air Force.

• On December 23, 2013, Lt Gen Franklin read what he described as an article in which one of the senators on the Senate Armed Services Committee indicated that he was scheduled to retire in the near future.

• On December 27, 2013, the Chief of Staff of the Air Force telephoned Lt Gen Franklin and informed him that the new Secretary had “lost confidence” in him and that he had two options: voluntarily retire from the Air Force at the lower grade of major general, or wait for the Secretary to remove him from his command in the immediate future.

• Three hours after this call, Lt Gen Franklin decided to retire. Because Lt Gen Franklin did not have the requisite time in his highest pay grade, this retirement carried with it a loss of rank and a concomitant loss of retirement pay.

• In his written retirement request, Lt Gen Franklin acknowledged the following: “My decisions as a [GCMCA] have come under great public scrutiny,” and “media attention . . . will likely occur on subsequent sexual assault cases I deal with.”

• On the same day that Lt Gen Franklin was contacted by the Chief of Staff, he received the referral package regarding Appellant’s case. On January 6, 2014, Lt Gen Franklin referred Appellant’s case, which included sexual assault charges, to a general court-martial. Thus, Appellant’s case qualified as a “subsequent sexual assault case[ ]” that Lt Gen Franklin had expressed concern about due to the likelihood of “media attention” and “great public scrutiny.”

• At the time he made the referral in Appellant’s case, Lt Gen Franklin was vulnerable to additional adverse personnel action by the Secretary of the Air Force. (Lt Gen Franklin did not officially retire until April 1, 2014.)

• The Secretary of the Air Force and the Chief of Staff of the Air Force failed to take the necessary prophylactic steps to ensure that Lt Gen Franklin’s handling of “subsequent sexual assault cases” did not give rise to the appearance of unlawful command influence. Specifically, upon determining that they had lost confidence in him, Lt Gen Franklin’s superiors failed to direct him not to take any further action in regard to court-martial matters pending before him. (For example, they did not direct him to send these matters to a higher headquarters GCMCA; they did not direct him to send them to an adjacent headquarters GCMCA; and they did not direct him to delay action on these matters and hold them until either an acting commander or successor in command had taken over.)

• In the alternative, once Lt Gen Franklin actually did refer the instant case to a general court-martial, his superiors failed to withdraw the charges and to then seek re-referral through commanders untainted by unlawful command influence.

Under the totality of these circumstances, we conclude that Appellant has shown “some evidence” of unlawful command influence by the Secretary of the Air Force and/or the Chief of Staff of the Air Force regarding the referral of the instant case to a general court-martial. See Stoneman, 57 M.J. at 41. In making this determination, we conclude that the Government has not met its burden of proving beyond a reasonable doubt that the relevant facts cited above did not exist or that these facts did not constitute unlawful command influence. See Salyer, 72 M.J. at 423.

Having established that there was apparent unlawful command influence in this case, we next conclude that the Government has not met its burden of proving beyond a reasonable doubt that the conduct of the Secretary of the Air Force and/or the Chief of Staff of the Air Force did not place an intolerable strain upon the public’s perception of the military justice system. See id. To the contrary, we deem the totality of the circumstances in this case to be particularly troubling and egregious. As such, we conclude that an objective, disinterested observer with knowledge of all the facts would harbor a significant doubt about the fairness of the court-martial proceedings. See Lewis, 63 M.J. at 415. Specifically, we conclude that members of the public would understandably question whether the conduct of the Secretary of the Air Force and/or the Chief of Staff of the Air Force improperly inhibited Lt Gen Franklin from exercising his court-martial convening authority in a truly independent and impartial manner as is required to ensure the integrity of the referral process. Indeed, we adopt Lt Gen Franklin’s words as our own: “[It] would be foolish to say there is no appearance of UCI.”

In reaching our holding in this case, we fully acknowledge that we do not have the authority to redress the chilling effect that the conduct of the Secretary of the Air Force and/or the Chief of Staff of the Air Force generally may have had on other convening authorities and in other criminal cases that are not before us. We recognize that such systemic problems must be left to Congress and the executive to address. Nonetheless, in individual cases that are properly presented to this Court—such as Appellant’s—we will remain ever mindful of Chief Judge Everett’s admonition that unlawful command influence is the “mortal enemy of military justice,” and we will meet our responsibility to serve as a “bulwark” against it by taking all appropriate steps within our power to counteract its malignant effects. Thomas, 22 M.J. at 393.

IV. Conclusion

This Court unequivocally endorses the Supreme Court’s observation that “federal courts have an independent interest in ensuring that legal proceedings appear fair to all who observe them.” Wheat v. United States, 486 U.S. 153, 160 (1988). In adhering to this pronouncement, we conclude that the appearance of unlawful command influence in this case cannot go unaddressed. Accordingly, we reverse the findings and sentence in this case without prejudice and return the case to the Judge Advocate General of the Air Force. A rehearing is authorized.

Judge STUCKY, dissenting.

 I am unable to agree with the majority that the Secretary of the Air Force or the Chief of Staff of the Air Force actually or apparently unlawfully influenced Appellant’s court-martial. Article 37(a), UCMJ, provides, in part: “No person subject to this chapter may attempt to coerce or, by any unauthorized means, influence the action of any convening, approving, or reviewing authority with respect to his judicial acts.” 10 U.S.C. § 837(a) (2012). There is no evidence that the Secretary even knew of Appellant’s case, let alone that she tried to coerce or influence Lieutenant General (Lt Gen) Franklin’s referral decision. Instead, she merely exercised her lawful authority to remove a commander in whom she had lost confidence by giving him an ultimatum: retire or be fired. The Chief of Staff simply relayed the Secretary’s message. Therefore, I do not see this case as one involving unlawful influence.

After finding no actual unlawful influence, the majority concludes that there is the appearance of unlawful command influence. To reach its conclusion, the majority relies on a test that, by its own terms, makes little sense: “Thus, the appearance of unlawful command influence will exist where an objective, disinterested observer, fully informed of all the facts and circumstances, would harbor a significant doubt about the fairness of the proceeding.” United States v. Boyce, 76 M.J. 242, 248–29, 2017 WL 2267276 (C.A.A.F. 2017) (quoting United States v. Lewis, 63 M.J. 405, 415 (C.A.A.F. 2006)). But it is difficult to understand how an objective, disinterested, fully informed observer, knowing that there is no actual unlawful influence, “would harbor a significant doubt about the fairness of the proceeding.”

***

Judge RYAN, dissenting.

***

I also agree with Judge Stucky that if there is no actual unlawful influence, “it is difficult to understand how an objective, disinterested, fully informed observer” would doubt the fairness of the proceedings—at least in this case.
Boyce, 76 M.J. at 254 (Stucky, J., dissenting). The military judge found as a matter of fact that Lt Gen Franklin “may be the most bombproof of any convening authority” because he had resolved to retire before referring Appellant’s charges and had, “on occasion, seemingly gone against the interests of others in the military” in Wilkerson and Wright. This factual finding is amply supported by the record. Based in part on this finding of fact, and the fact that every other person in the chain of command had recommended a general court-martial, the military judge in this case found as a matter of law that there was no actual or apparent unlawful command influence. Yet the majority, contrariwise, determines that Lt Gen Franklin’s demonstrably independent judgment is a “legal conclusion,” and then dismisses it. See Boyce, 76 M.J. at 250.

Certainly there was monkey business aplenty here with respect to Lt Gen Franklin, and I share the majority’s frustration with “the chilling effect that the conduct of the Secretary of the Air Force and/or the Chief of Staff of the Air Force generally may have had on other convening authorities and in other criminal cases that are not before us.” Id. at 253. But a correctible legal error of apparent unlawful command influence must be based upon more than the theoretical presence of influence on a particular convening authority. It must be based upon an objective observation of the “facts and circumstances” of an individual case, and a finding of substantial prejudice to the rights of the accused. See United States v. Salyer, 72 M.J. 415, 423 (C.A.A.F. 2013). As we have stated in another context:

[T]here must be something more than an appearance of evil to justify action by an appellate court in a particular case. “Proof of [command influence] in the air, so to speak, will not do.” We will not presume that a military judge has been influenced simply by the proximity of events which give the appearance of command influence in the absence of a connection to the result of a particular trial.

United States v. Allen, 33 M.J. 209, 212 (C.M.A. 1991) (alteration in original) (footnote omitted) (citations omitted), cert. denied. * * *

Points for Discussion

1. What is the court’s authority for providing a remedy for “apparent” as opposed to “actual” unlawful command influence? Does Article 37, UCMJ prohibit apparent unlawful command influence?

2. Should the Secretary of the Air Force and the Air Force Chief of Staff face discipline of any kind for their actions?

3. Commanders cannot be indifferent to crimes committed by members of their units. But they must be very careful about what they say. Commenting on unlawful command influence, then-Lieutenant Colonel Mark Johnson wrote: “If commanders must address [crime within a unit] they are reminded to talk about the offense, rather than the offender, and the process, rather than the result.” Mark L. Johnson, Unlawful Command Influence—Still with Us;
4. Is there anything analogous to unlawful command influence in the civilian context? Could the mayor of a city urge citizens to be “tough on crime” when sitting on juries? How is the military different?

UNITED STATES v. BALDWIN
U.S. Court of Appeals for the Armed Forces
54 M.J. 308 (C.A.A.F. 2001)

Judge SULLIVAN delivered the opinion of the Court.

During the fall of 1997 and in February of 1998, appellant [Captain Holly Baldwin, U.S. Army] was tried by a general court-martial composed of officer members at Fort Bliss, Texas. Contrary to her pleas, she was found guilty of two specifications of larceny, conduct unbecoming an officer, and two specifications of service-discrediting conduct (mail tampering and obstruction of justice), in violation of Articles 121, 133, and 134, Uniform Code of Military Justice, 10 U.S.C. §§ 921, 933, and 934, respectively. The military judge then dismissed the two larceny specifications as multiplicitious with the remaining offenses, and the members sentenced appellant to a dismissal, 1 year’s confinement, and total forfeitures on February 6, 1998. The convening authority on May 19, 1998, approved this sentence, and the Court of Criminal Appeals affirmed on October 1, 1999.

On May 19, 2000, this Court granted review on the following [issue] of law:

I. WHETHER THE CONVENING AUTHORITY EXERCISED UNLAWFUL COMMAND INFLUENCE OVER THE PROCEEDINGS BY REQUIRING THE COURT MEMBERS, IN THE MIDDLE OF THE TRIAL, TO ATTEND AN OFFICER PROFESSIONAL DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM WHERE “APPROPRIATE” PUNISHMENTS FOR OFFICER COURT–MARTIAL DEFENDANTS WAS DISCUSSED.

* * *

Nine months after her court-martial, appellant signed a statement and later filed it with the Court of Criminal Appeals. See United States v. Grostefon, 12 M.J. 431 (C.M.A. 1982). It said:

AFFADAVIT [sic]
November 20, 1998

I, Holly M. Baldwin, would like to make the following statement. Shortly after I was transferred from Fort Lewis to Fort Bliss (fall 1997), Ft. Bliss was having a Family Values Week. One of the Officer Professional Development programs mandated by Commanding General Costello was one directed at Ethics. At that particular OPD, one of the topics discussed was an incident that happened with three of the Officers in the 31st ADA BDE that were being court-martialed. The address included comments that the court-martial sentences were too lenient and that the minimum sentence should be at least one year and that Officers should be punished harsher than enlisted soldiers because Officers should always set the example and be above reproach. The day after this OPD one of the officers from the 31st was set to be sentenced. I believe his name was Major Brennan. I attended this OPD, but didn’t learn of the sentencing until a discussion I had with his attorney, Mr. Jim Maus. He is an attorney in my civilian attorney’s (Jim Darnell) law office in El Paso, TX. Mr. Maus was Major Brennan’s civilian counsel. Mr. Maus also informed me that this type of OPD was inappropriate and that it could be considered jury tampering and he was filing an appeal on Major Brennan’s behalf stating such.

On the day of my conviction and sentencing, the final part of the trial was delayed for another OPD that was mandatory for all Officers on post. This OPD dealt with the situation Lt. Kelly Flynn was embroiled [sic]. The theme about this OPD was that she was not punished as she should have been and that she had basically gotten over. It was then stated she should not have been allowed to resign, but should have been court-martialed. I would also like to note here that I submitted a Resignation for Good of Service [sic] on or about 1 May 97 and it was held and never sent up as the regulation states. That afternoon after the officers on my panel went to the OPD, I was convicted and sentenced to 1 year at Ft. Leavenworth. It should also be noted that 4 of the officers on my panel were in the same rating chain. They included the Brigade Commander, Brigade Deputy Commander, the HHC Company Commander and another BDE Primary Officer.

I swear the above mentioned statement is true to the best of knowledge.

Signed Holly Morris Baldwin

Date November 20, 1998

(Emphasis added).

Appellant argued that “her sentence to one year in confinement and the rejection of her request for Resignation for the Good of the Service was the result of these actions, which clearly constitute unlawful command influence in this case.” The Government did not oppose this motion to file, but in its final brief it simply asserted that “it [appellant’s claim] lacks merit.” The Court of Criminal Appeals summarily affirmed this case.

* * *

Air Force First Lieutenant Kelly Flinn (whose name is misspelled in the affidavit and is correctly spelled Flinn) was the first female assigned to pilot a B-52 aircraft. She was allowed to resign from the Air Force after being charged with making a false official statement, committing adultery with a subordinate’s spouse, and disobeying an order. Her case received national media attention in 1997.—Eds.
The Government argues that appellant’s post-trial claim of unlawful command influence should be denied because she “has failed to meet her threshold burden of production in this case.” Final Brief at 7. It further contends that “[a]ppellant’s own ambiguous, self-serving, and unsubstantiated declaration does not establish a viable claim of unlawful command influence.” Moreover, it notes that “appellant never raised this issue at trial” nor made any “effort to bring this allegation to the military judge’s attention and conduct some minimal voir dire before findings and sentence deliberations.” Id. We conclude that none of these reasons legally justifies the lower appellate court’s summary denial of appellant’s post-trial claim of unlawful command influence.

Article 37, UCMJ, 10 U.S.C. § 837, states:

§ 837. Art. 37. Unlawfully influencing action of court

(a) No authority convening a general, special, or summary court-martial, nor any other commanding officer, may censure, reprimand, or admonish the court or any member, military judge, or counsel thereof, with respect to the findings or sentence adjudged by the court, or with respect to any other exercises of its or his functions in the conduct of the proceedings. No person subject to this chapter may attempt to coerce or, by any unauthorized means, influence the action of a court-martial or any other military tribunal or any member thereof, in reaching the findings or sentence in any case, or the action of any convening, approving, or reviewing authority with respect to his judicial acts. The foregoing provisions of the subsection shall not apply with respect to (1) general instructional or informational courses in military justice if such courses are designed solely for the purpose of instructing members of a command in the substantive and procedural aspects of courts-martial, or (2) to statements and instructions given in open court by the military judge, president of a special court-martial, or counsel.

(Emphasis added.)

We have long held that the use of command meetings to purposefully influence the members in determining a court-martial sentence violates Article 37, UCMJ. United States v. Levite, 25 M.J. 334, 339 (C.M.A. 1987); United States v. Cruz, 25 M.J. 326, 329 (C.M.A. 1987); United States v. Thomas, 22 M.J. 388, 393 (C.M.A. 1986); United States v. McCann, 8 U.S.C.MA 675, 676, 25 CMR 179, 180 (1958). Moreover, we have also held that the mere “confluence” of the timing of such meetings with members during ongoing courts-martials and their subject matter dealing with court-martial sentences can require a sentence rehearing. See United States v. Brice, 19 M.J. 170, 172 n. 3 (C.M.A. 1985).

Here, appellant avers that there were two command officer meetings before and during her court-martial, which she and the officers of her panel attended. She also avers that various court-martial situations on base and in the Air Force at large were discussed. Furthermore, she asserts that comments were made that court-martial sentences were too lenient; that officers should always be punished more harshly than enlisted persons; and that the minimum sentences should be 1 year. Finally, appellant points out that she, an officer, subsequently received a 1–year sentence at her court-martial. If appellant’s averments are true, then as in Brice, a confluence of timing and subject matter would exist.

The Government contends, however, that appellant’s self-serving averments are not legally sufficient (or competent) to raise her post-trial claim. We disagree. In United States v. Ayala, 43 M.J. 296, 300 (1995), this Court held that “[t]he quantum of evidence necessary to raise unlawful command influence is the same as that required to submit a factual issue to the trier of fact.” While not particularly delineating the proof required, we have generally held that it must be more than “mere speculation.” See United States v. Biagase, 50 M.J. 143, 150 (1999). Here, appellant’s post-trial statement was based on her own observations (cf. United States v. Ruiz, 49 M.J. 340, 348 (1998) (no abuse of discretion for convening authority to refuse to order post-trial hearing on basis of unsubstantiated assertions of unlawful command influence by counsel)), and it was detailed in nature. Cf. United States v. Johnston, 39 M.J. 242, 244 (C.M.A. 1994) (must be more than a bare allegation). Moreover, the record of trial, which contains an unexplained decision to delay any sessions on the date in question until the early afternoon, may be viewed as tending to corroborate appellant’s allegation that there was a command meeting at that time. In the absence of any post-trial submission from the Government, we conclude appellant’s allegations in this context are sufficient to raise a post-trial complaint of unlawful command influence. See United States v. Ayala, supra (some evidence to which a member might reasonably attach credit); see generally United States v. Ginn, 47 M.J. 236, 248 (1997) (third principle: “if the affidavit is factually adequate on its face to state a claim of legal error . . .”).

Although we reject the Government’s legal insufficiency claim, we are reluctant to order relief without a complete record concerning appellant’s claim. A full development of the material facts surrounding these command meetings and their effect on appellant’s court-martial is required. See United States v. Dykes, 38 M.J. 270; see also United States v. Fricke, 53 M.J. 149, 155 (2000). Accordingly, [an evidentiary] hearing should be ordered.

* * *

The decision of the United States Army Court of Criminal Appeals is set aside. The record of trial is returned to the Judge Advocate General of the Army for submission to a convening authority for a limited hearing on the issue of command influence. At the conclusion of the hearing, the judge will make specific findings of fact on that issue. A verbatim record of the proceedings will be submitted after authentication to the Court of Criminal Appeals for further review. Thereafter, Article 67(a)(3), UCMJ, 10 U.S.C. § 867(a)(3), shall apply.

Points for Discussion

1. If General Costello is responsible for maintaining good order and discipline, what is wrong with expressing his opinion on minimum sentences and whether soldiers accused of wrongdoing should be allowed to resign? Suppose a civilian mayor of a town gave a speech urging prosecutors, judges, and juries... to get tough on crime. Would that prevent fair trials in the town? Would criminal convictions have to be reversed?

2. What is the remedy for General Costello’s action? Can there be no more trials at Fort Bliss after his speech?